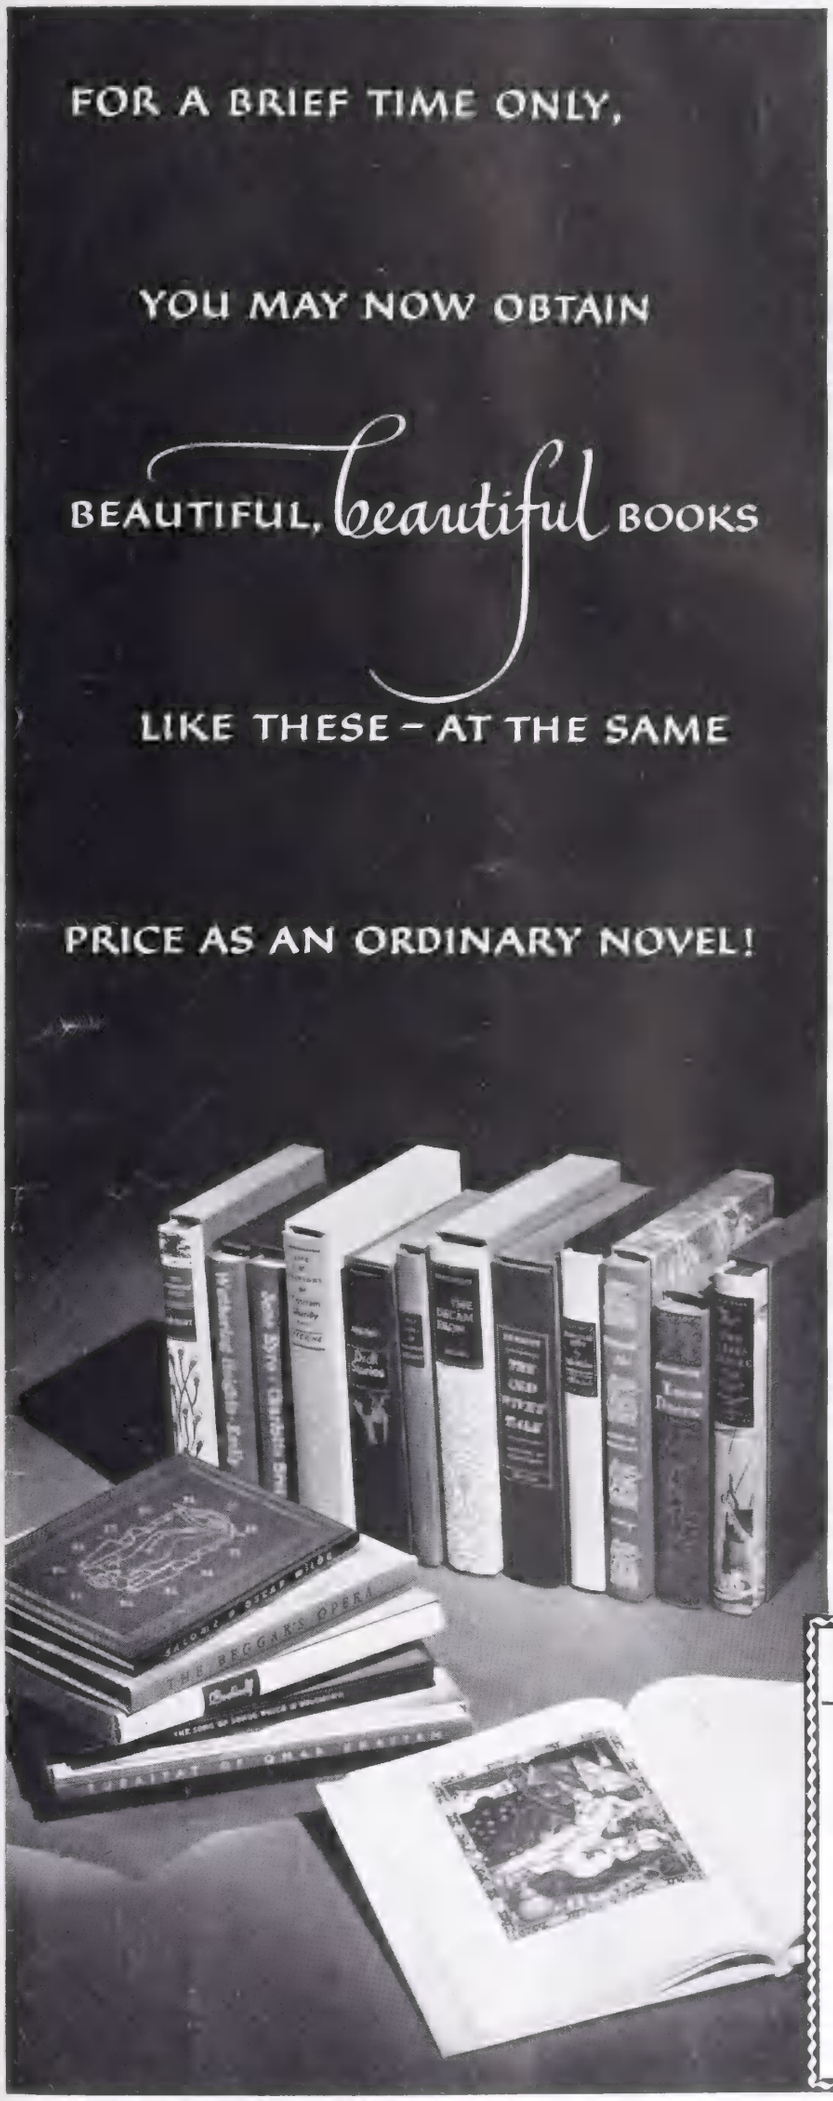
If ever we saw a featherweight marvel for extra seating, indoors or out, the All-Luminum Camp Stool is it. A mere 1½ pounds, it firmly supports even a 250-pounder. You can tote six or more on one arm, store them on a shelf. The canvas duck seats are waterproof and color fast (blue or green). The rounded aluminum legs have rubber caps that maintain their stance and safeguard indoor floors. $2.98, Shillito's, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Kooklite's innovative merger of a 1000° stove and a 300-candle-power lantern isn't half of its story. It burns without clogging the leaded "gas" you feed your car, gives dual service for 10 hours on 1½ pints. A turntable regulates or blacks out stove's heat. A sliding shield does the same for the lantern, and a directional spotlight reflector beams concentrated light when that's wanted. $16.95. Dayton's, Minneapolis, Minn.



Gossamer sheerness, elegance, and Spartan wearability combine to make these exquisite Plexonweave Ivy mats wonders. Even when you handle the woven Plexon, you'll say it's linen-weave silk and the spun-glass appliqué is white satin. And what heat resistance! Even a hot iron doesn't faze them should they become drawer-creased. Damp-wiping "launders" them. Green, yellow, aqua, white. $3.50 ea. Carole Stupell, 509 Madison, N. Y.

You have to use these Swedish-born Wettex Sponge Cloths to appreciate what marvels they are. They look and feel like thick, soft chamois, and, like it, wash and wipe in the same breath with nary a streak or lint particle in their wake. They absorb and hold water like mad and have a magic way of shedding soil after the grimiest stint. Rugged as can be, too. A treasure for dishwashing. 6 for $2.94. Bloomingdale's, New York.

It's folly on many scores to paint sash without aproning the windowpane. You'll find Ramsell's Liquid Masking Tape a boon for that assignment. It brushes on in a twinkling and, best of all, you can paint right over any that strays to the sash area. It dries rapidly to tape form and is a cinch to remove. Just score it with a knife along the sash edge and peel it off like adhesive-tape. Pint. $1.49. Rayl's, Griswold & State, Detroit.

Yes, you may now—BUT FOR A BRIEF TIME ONLY!— obtain a unique collection of the world's classics especially illustrated by the greatest artists and well printed on special papers—for the same price as rental library novels!

DON'T think we enjoy rubbing it in, when we say that this offer is open to you for a brief time only!

How we hate to say it!

We would much prefer to expand the membership of The Heritage Club, and expand it, and expand it.

But we can't.

For the increasing governmental limitations upon the civilian use of paper supplies has created a paper shortage. Of the superior quality of paper which goes into the Heritage books, the supply is so limited as to cause us to gnash our teeth in fury.

During World War II we were forced to make the same limitation: this year the membership of The Heritage Club must again be restricted to thirty thousand. Of this number, there are fewer than eight hundred open at this moment. For a brief time only, therefore . . .

THE MEMBERS of The Heritage Club regularly come into possession of "the classics which are our heritage from the past, in editions which will be the heritage of the future." These books are not falsely de luxe, nor are they old editions dressed up for a new market. They are especially designed by the most famous typographers, illustrated by the greatest of the world's artists, carefully printed on papers which have been chemically tested to assure a life of at least two centuries, then handsomely bound and boxed.

You may find this next statement hard to believe; but it is true, and it seems a principal reason for our continuing success: the members obtain these books for the same price that they are called upon to pay for ordinary novels! Despite sharp increases in costs, each member pays only $3.65 for each book—or only $3.28 if he pays in advance!

NOW the Prospectus is being prepared for the Sixteenth Series; and in this Prospectus will be described all of the books to be distributed to the members during the coming twelve months. Some of these members, by the way, have been members of The Heritage Club ever since the Club was established nearly sixteen years ago! If you elect to get into this obviously-satisfied membership (and in time to get in!), you will obtain books like these:

Don Quixote, in an enormous volume profusely illustrated by the great Moroccan artist Edy Legrand; Anna Karenina, in a volume of over a thousand pages, illustrated with lithographs in color by the English painter Barnett Freedman; Tom Jones, with more than sixty water-colors by T. M. Cleland; Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, with color drawings by Edward A. Wilson; Crime and Punishment, illustrated with wood-engravings by Fritz Eichenberg; and The Old Curiosity Shop, and The Tales of Hoffmann . . .

Yet, if it should happen that you do not desire to have any of these books, you are given a list of three dozen Heritage books-in-print—from which you may select substitution titles.

THERE HAVE BEEN great book bargains before, of course, and there will be again. But it seems safe to say that never in the history of book publishing has a greater bargain than this been offered to wise buyers.

You are invited to put this statement to the test. If you will fill out the coupon printed herewith and mail it to The Heritage Club, you will be sent a copy of the descriptive Prospectus the moment it comes off the press. Also, one of the available memberships will be reserved for you, awaiting receipt of your formal application.

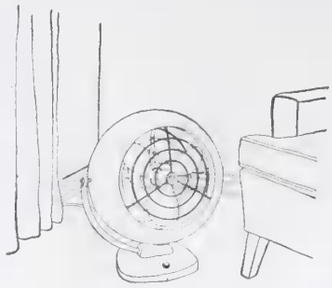
Portable Fans Bring Cool Comfort

where it does the most good

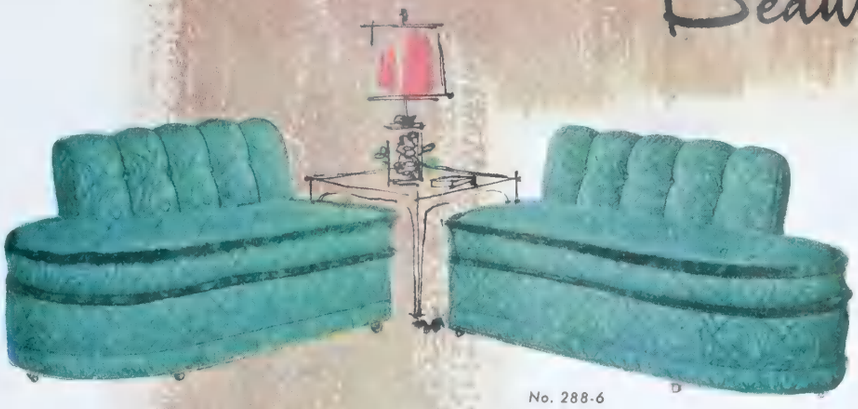


Air kept in motion helps to keep you cool on hot days. Recognition of new variations of this principle has evolved several types of portable electric fans to perform this function. Conventional fans cool by blowing a breeze toward you. Circulator fans with horizontal blades cool by setting air in gentle motion throughout the room. Exhaust fans cool by pulling warm air out of the room, substituting cool, outside night air. All offer simple, inexpensive means to summer comfort.

• The Mobilaire fan by Westinghouse is especially effective for nighttime cooling. Place it 3 feet in front of an open window to exhaust inside air through this, draw cool air in from other open windows. Portable and adjustable in height.

■ Breezes are blown straight up, straight out, or at any angle in between by the Fanette by Fresh'nd-Aire. It comes in 8" or 10" size, in light green plastic or ivory and gold. Light enough to carry around wherever it will do the most good.

• With the Vornado by O. A. Sutton Corp., you direct air-flow horizontally from wall to wall, or vertically from ceiling to floor. The air stream rotates around room continuously cooling you without drafts wherever you may be sitting.



DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

■ You needn't be without a window fan just because you have casement windows. Installed with blades facing the room, this fan by Lau Blower Co. pulls in cool air, with blades facing outside, exhausts hot air. Use on sill or hang on support bar.

PORTABLE FANS BRING COOL COMFORT WHERE IT DOES THE MOST GOOD

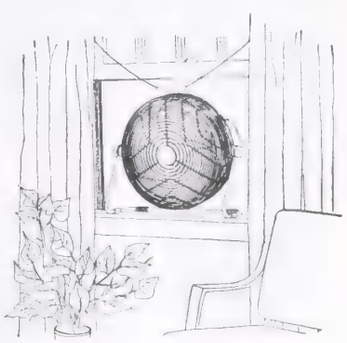
• A twist of the wrist swivels the Air-Flight fan by Welch from hot air exhaust to cool air intake. Slip it into window sill base plate, hang on wall or use on floor. Weighs less than 10 pounds, easy to move from room to room as wanted.



• Since hot air rises, it follows that floor level air is the coolest in any room. The Circulair with its horizontal blades circulates this floor zone air roomwide from all directions. Comes in green or fawn. Made by Kisco Co. Inc.

• Specially designed louvers on all four sides of this Diehl table air circulator distribute air evenly to cool an entire room. Table 17" high by 16½" square, comes in walnut, mahogany, or blond oak, doubles as coffee or chairside table.

• Twin top and bottom blades in this General Electric hassock-type fan move warm ceiling currents and circulate cool floor currents respectively. Thus it eliminates dead air spaces and provides cool room-wide air circulation.

• Ilg's double-purpose fan, the Ilgdual-aire, serves as an exhaust fan at night, as circulating fan by day. Fan can be pivoted on its base to direct air flow at any angle. Use on floor or on window sill with safety chain to secure it.

The knack of LISTENING

By Richard Williams

Now, whom does that girl remind me of? Someone I used to know. The name was—let's see: A B C D. . . . Why don't the people in the second balcony get vertigo? Maybe they do. What would happen if the balcony fell? Would they be dead or just injured? Has there ever been an accident? . . . Is that a clarinet? Or is it an oboe? I never can tell the difference. . . . What is he looking so mad about? He's getting red in the face.

Is that a fair sample of what goes on in your mind while a symphony is being performed? And, after it is finished, do you say, "I didn't understand this music"? I ask: Did you hear it? I know you were there at the concert. But did you hear the music?

I have long believed that the difficulty of enjoying music lies not in a lack of ability to understand but in a lack of ability to concentrate. It is not true that you, a sensitive and perceptive person, are unable to understand whatever message the Sibelius Violin Concerto has to offer. Indeed, I am not sure that the Sibelius Violin Concerto has a message to offer other than the message of beauty and emotion presented within a design that gives beauty validity and makes emotion effective. You can respond to this beauty and emotion, once you are able to hear the music.

However, what happens? For a while you will follow the course of the music. You will be absorbed by the beginning, by the first melody of the Sibelius Violin Concerto so clearly stated by the assured yet plaintive solo violin, singing above the small quick waves of the strings. But somewhere in the middle of the first movement the thread will be snapped. Your attention will wander. You take up your program and read first the program notes in the mistaken belief that they will help you to hear this music, and, having finished those, you read the advertisements in the program. I once saw a man so bored by a concert that he read not only the notes and the advertisements but finally the text on his hatband.

After a while, you may return to the music with a guilty conscience, realizing that you had been absent, that you had been playing musical hooky. You will then conclude that this particular piece of music is not for you, that it is above your head, that you "cannot understand it."

Therefore, the most useful sugestion in "music appreciation" is ot one concerning either tech- iique or aesthetics, but an answer o this question: How can you earn to listen?

I believe that there are three ways. Number one, a simple matter f experience. The experience of istening to any music diminishes ome of the strangeness of the mu- ical language. The more you hear, he more you hear. It is like being n a room where French is spoken y the other guests. If you remem- er a little of your high school rench, you won't at first under- tand the rapid conversation around ou, but stay in the room long nough and by-and-by you will get sed to the language and you will nderstand, if not all, certainly ore of it.

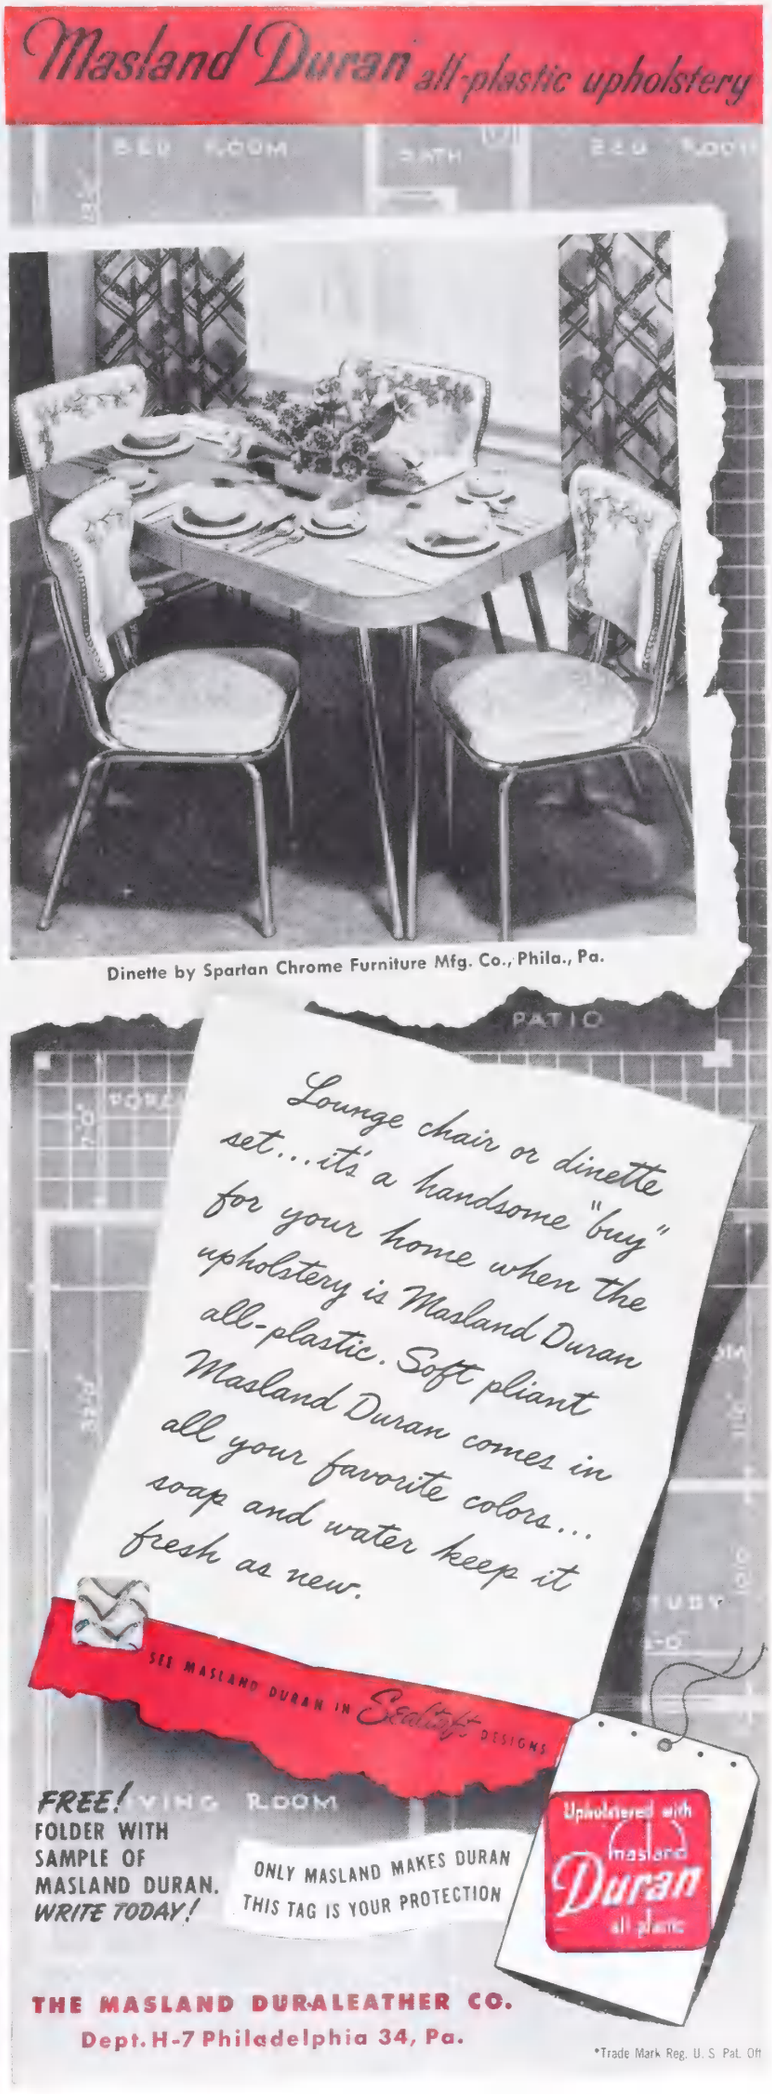
Number two, strip yourself of ny feeling of guilt. Don't force ourself. If your thoughts fly off, here is nothing you can do about anyway, so you might as well ay to yourself, "I'll listen as long s I can. But I know that concen- ration cannot always be sum- oned by a conscious effort."

Number three, it seems to me a ood plan to listen to the same iece of music several times, many imes, allowing, of course, a decent nterval for rest and refreshment. The music that we enjoy most is amiliar music. And great music, s we all know, can be listened to numerable times. (Which does ot mean that you should play a ecording of Beethoven's Sixth Sym- hony and play it right over gain.) On your second listening ou will remember certain pas- ages that you heard the first time. These will serve as passages of eference, as recognizable faces in room of strange faces. You will o on and presently turn more of ie strangers into acquaintances.

Such are my beliefs as to the rst experiences with music. It is s if one were beginning to learn a trange language.

LONG comes Roger Sessions, and in a very interesting little ook called The Musical Experi- nce of Composer, Performer, Lis- ner, he tells us that there are our stages in the listener's devel- pment. Mr. Sessions is one of merica's eminent composers. He s also a successful teacher, now n the faculty of the University of alifornia at Berkeley. What he ays about listening, therefore, is o be considered seriously and may e helpful in guiding us to greater njoyment. He begins where I eave off. What he calls the first tep in listening is to me the sec- ond step: it presupposes one's hav- ing learned how to be attentive. He says:

"It is not simply being present when music is performed, nor is it even simply recognizing bits of the music—leit-motifs, or themes, or salient features in a score. It is rather, as it were, opening one's ears to the sounds as they succeed each other, discovering whatever point of contact one can find, and, in fact, following the music as well as one can in its continuity. We perhaps tend to ignore the fact that listeners are, like composers and performers, variously endowed, and also that they differ very widely in experience.



"But this initial stage in listening to music is an entirely direct one: the listener brings to the music whatever he can bring, with no other preoccupation than that of hearing. This is, of course, what is to be desired; it is the condition of his really hearing. He will hear the music only to the extent that he identifies himself with it, establishing a fresh and essentially naïve contact with it, without preconceived ideas and without strained effort."

THE second step, he says, occurs when "the listener's reaction is immediate and seems in a sense identical with the act of hearing." It develops from the first stage and is barely recognizable as a second stage. But it is important because it is the "stage of enjoyment," or at the least the stage where enjoyment begins.

The third phase he calls "musical understanding." The obstacle to understanding music lies in the fact that music "has few obvious contacts with the world of ordinary experience."

The visual art, most of it, is relatively accessible to us, since pictures or sculptures depict something with which we are familiar from life experience. This is even truer of literary art, since we ourselves constantly use and work with words. But—"In the case of music there are no such clear analogies. The technical facts which are commonplace to the composer, and even many of those proper to the performer, have no clear analogies in the ordinary experience of the non-musician. The latter finds them quite mysterious and, as I have already pointed out, tends to exaggerate both their uniqueness and their inaccessibility to the layman. . . . He is likely not only to regard music per se as a book in principle closed

How to leave home and like it

By Louisa M. Comstock

Whatever your plans for the Fourth, celebrate it again the next time you are in or near Philadelphia with a visit to old Independence Hall. It was here on July 4, 1776, that the Continental Congress voted the final form of the Declaration of Independence, and all the fireworks began. Not that Independence Hall is a fresh or unusual travel experience, but today the times themselves make it something of a pilgrimage, and you will now find that it has recently come under the tender ministration of the National Park Service, as part of the Independence Hall National Historical Park project.

Through the joint efforts of the city, state, and Federal government, this will eventually include some 27 properties throughout the city, all of them more or less associated with the establishment of a way of life we are holding more and more dear, and a handsome mall to give Independence Square a worthier setting. Some of the 27, of course, are already yours to behold. To make sure your sight-seeing keeps up with the project, check at the information center in the west wing of Independence Hall itself.

The distinction between indoors and outdoors is gradually disappearing, and our houses and living habits are beginning to reflect this development.

MERGE INDOORS AND OUTDOORS?

By Robert W. Carrick

This business of merging indoors and outdoors is neither a fad nor architectural whimsy. Rather, it is the logical answer to the social and economic pressures of our times. It also reflects a maturing of our aesthetic point of view as it applies to design and use of materials.

We have broadened our frame of reference. Home is no longer a house on a lot, but a highly integrated, highly organized living space that extends from lot line to lot line and grows out of the natural landscape.

This point of view is aesthetically satisfying. It is also highly practical in view of the upward spiral of building costs. To offset the shrinking size of our houses, we convert garden space into usable living space. To make small houses seem larger from the inside than they are, we open up whole walls with glass. Once the visual barrier is removed, we design indoors and outdoors so that they will flow together with natural continuity. And this allows us to indulge our instinctive preference for the colors, patterns, and the textures of nature. (Continued on page 43)

Indoors and outdoors, you are always conscious of the gnarled, live oaks that surround this house designed to capitalize on the natural setting. Its small size belies interior spaciousness produced by glass walls. Living room wall panels open wide on pivots.

Sturdy skeleton structure of natural redwood gives sense of secure shelter, while transparent walls create illusion of living outdoors. See how pattern of oak branches is "brought indoors" through glass of gable end. Concrete floor striped with redwood continues outdoors to form terrace. Free-standing fireplace, open on both sides, adds to air of spaciousness. Rug, Joseph Blumfield.

What is leading us to merge indoors and outdoors

Thanks to modern technologies and Climate Control this fusion of indoors and outdoors is feasible in all parts of the country. Even in areas where extreme heat or cold make outdoor living impractical for several months a year, the transparent wall does a job. It admits warming winter sun, a year-round view, and continues to make a small house bigger.

In the house shown on these four pages there is no "indoors." To many people, this might appear to be an excessive use of glass. But for this house—in a shady grove of live oaks—it works perfectly. The idea to strive for is not the elimination of solid walls, but the intelligent use of some glass so that indoors and outdoors combine for better living.

A wall doesn't have to be entirely of glass to create a visual merger of indoors and outdoors. See how vertical redwood boards of far wall tend to disappear because of glass panels between, while absence of wood members on left wall visually diminishes angle, makes room seem larger. Planting bed completes merger by bringing greenery indoors.

Another version of the disappearing wall is built with horizontal redwood beams alternating with narrow strips of glass. Upper section is a slanted skylight. Since your mind's eye fills in sections of tree trunks blotted out by wood beams, you feel as if you were dining outdoors in the oak grove. At the same time you have privacy, since it is difficult to see in from outside. Even the kitchen area, supplied with necessary wall space, is located visually "under the trees."

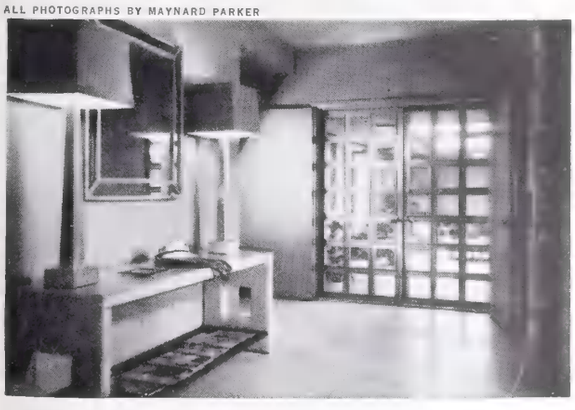
Use existing walls and overhangs to provide Climate Control for your outdoor living room. Your expanded building dollar will buy outdoor comfort two months more a year.

Enclosed on three sides by house and on fourth by louvered wall, this patio has complete privacy. Textures of brick, stone, and plants provide "low cost" decoration.

Outdoor living rooms cost 1/3 as much

You'll discover a special inducement for merging indoor and outdoor living when you start to build a house. Even at today's prices, an outdoor living room is a Big Bargain. You'll figure the cost of your house at the local rate per square foot of enclosed space and you'll find a garage or a semi-enclosed porch will run about half that. But if you create outdoor living space in a spot sheltered by walls and overhangs of the house itself, you can knock that square-foot price down to about one-third. Your outdoor budget will have to cover only paving and plants—no insulation, no expensive heating system. Study this house and see how it's done.



Outdoor room visually enlarges interior. Here, space for "indoor" garden was borrowed by placing screen doors a few feet beyond sliding glass wall. Louvers at far side of patio admit breeze.

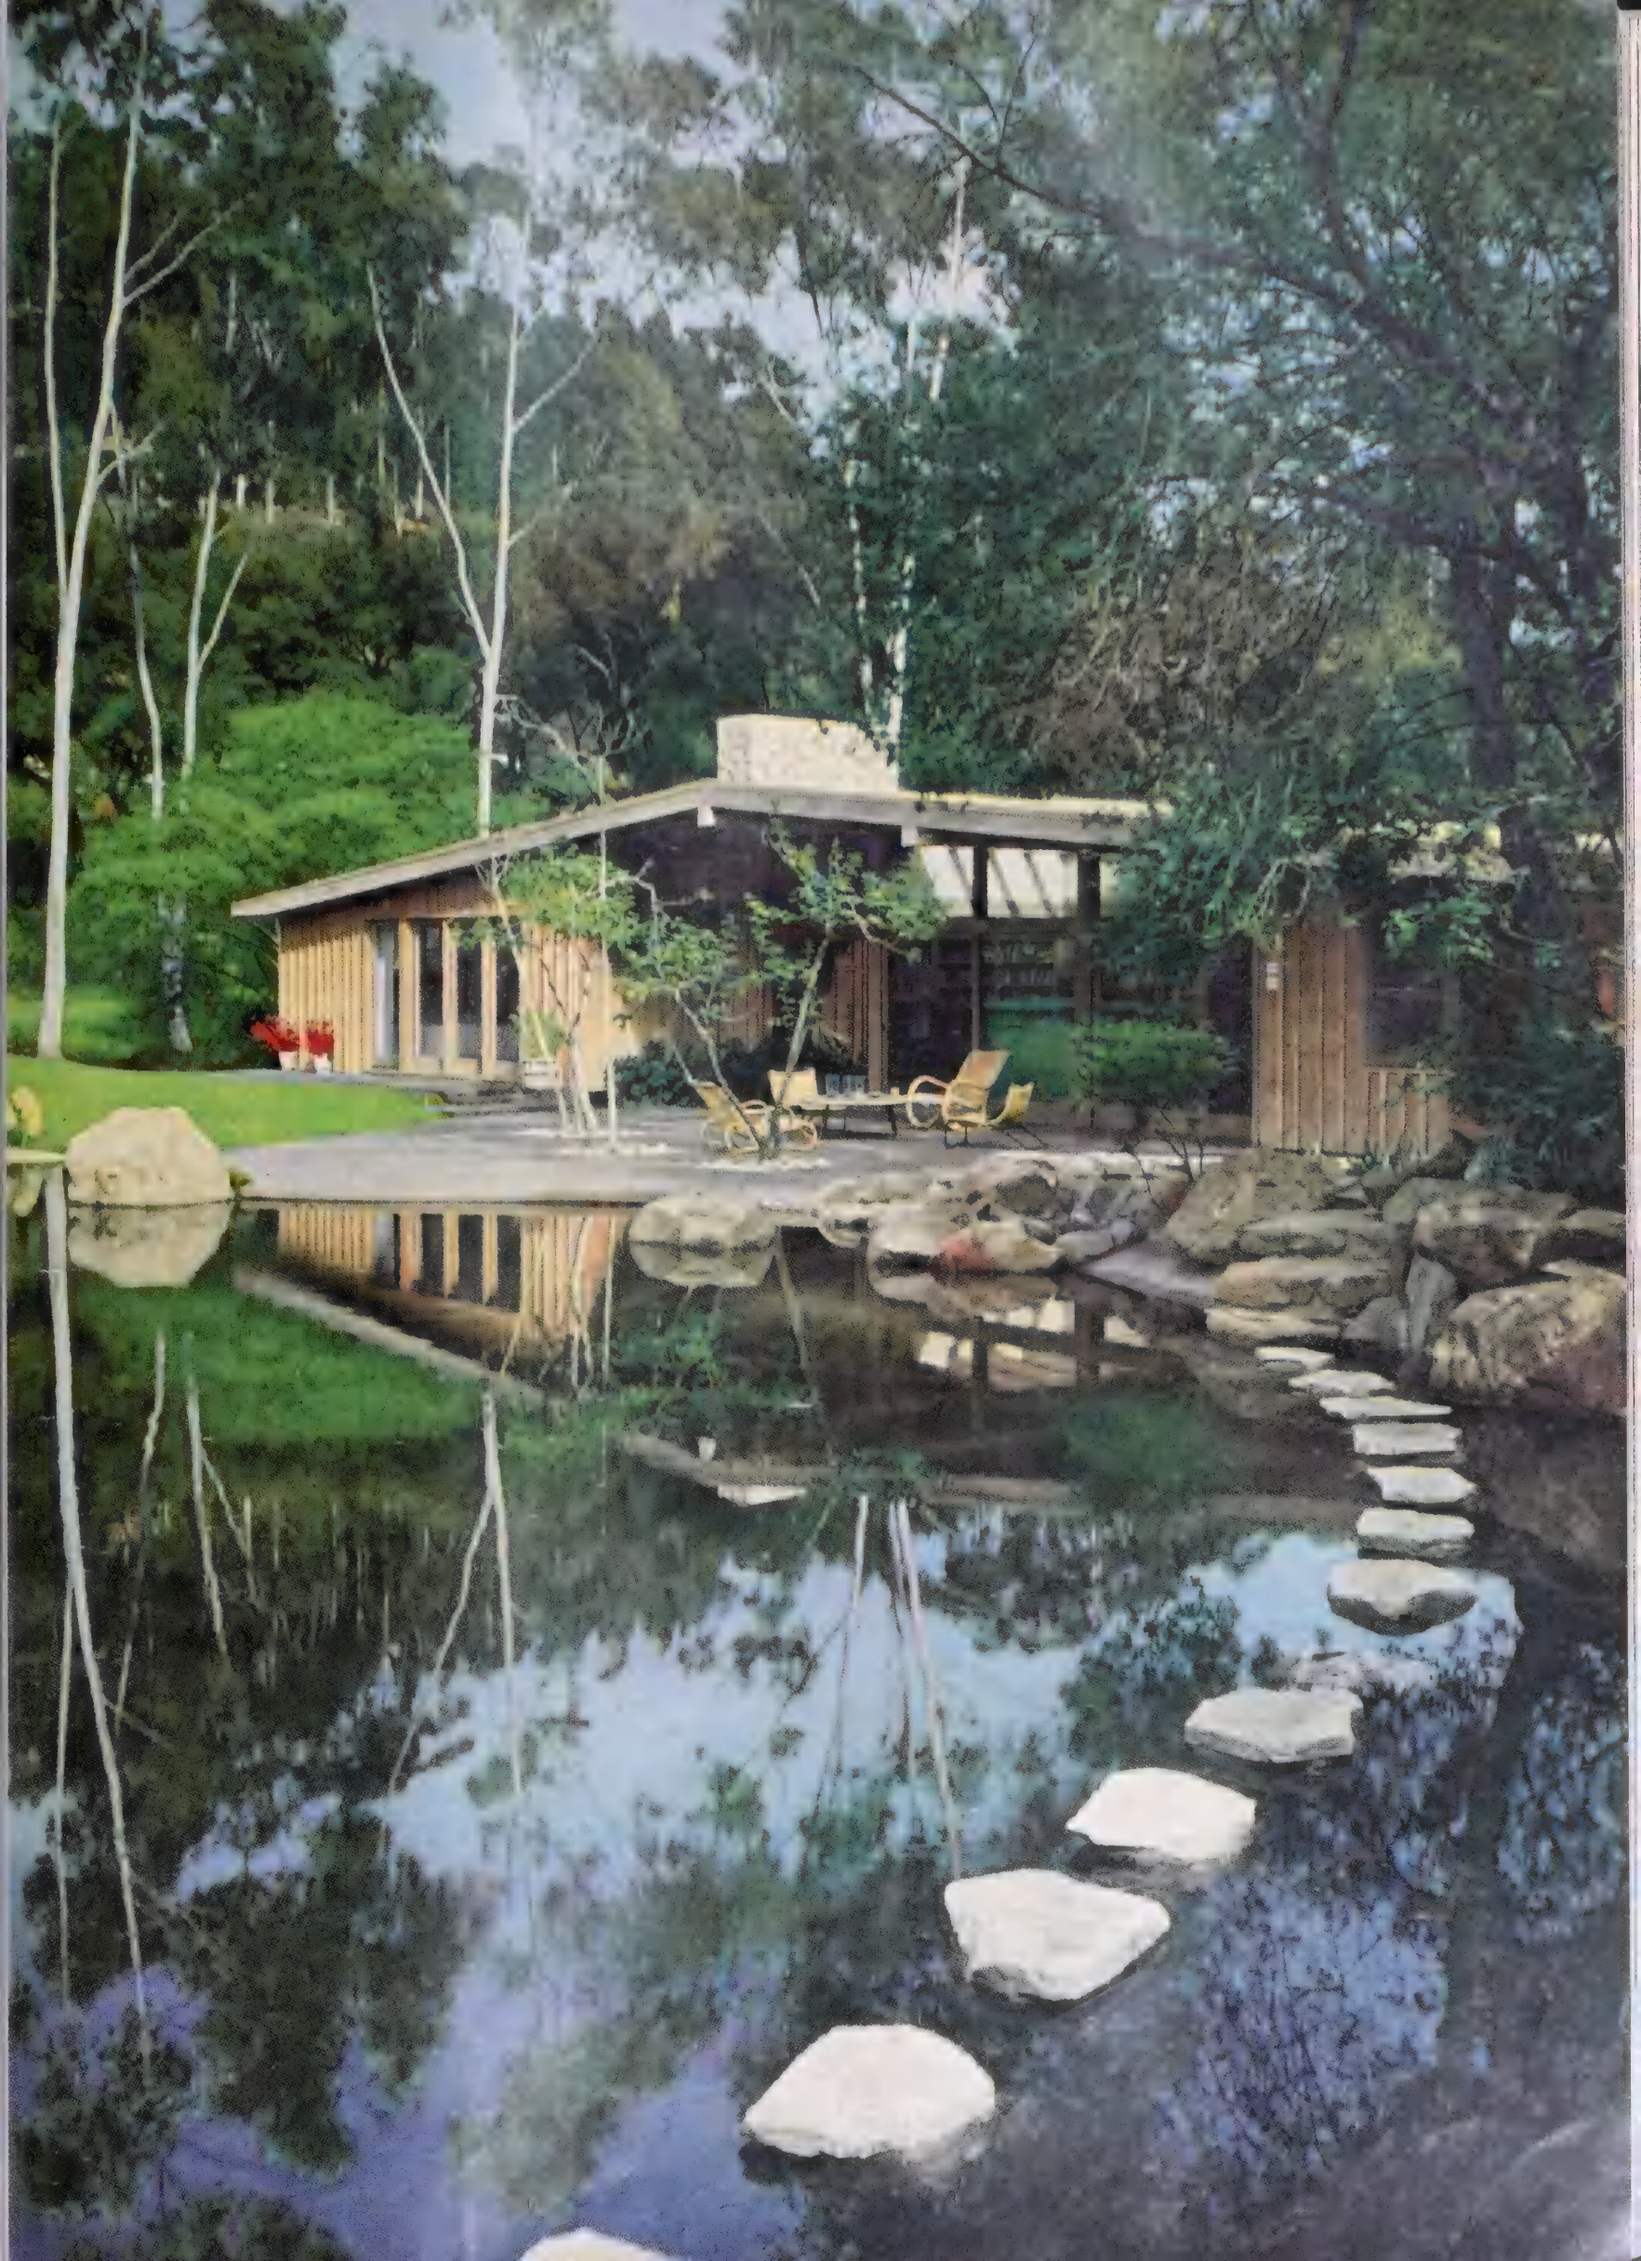
Living close to Nature

By pushing back the walls of our houses we admit nature to our circle of living, and temper the pace of our existence with its restful beauty

Mr. and Mrs. Zola Hall, owners

Edla Muir, architect



Edward Huntsman-Trout, landscape architect

A house like this cannot be measured in feet any more than a symphony can be added up in decibels. For its space is not contained within four walls. It flows out through glass walls, across terrace and pool to wooded landscape beyond. So nature becomes part of the background for everyday living. In fact, the outdoors is such a taken-for-granted part of their house, the Halls use the same furniture indoors (right) and out (above). It's like moving it from one side of their living room to the other. Thus they live, dine, and entertain unhampered by conventional restrictions.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Only the skillful integration of a house and its natural environment can produce such rewarding results as this. For here is fine art—a masterful composition of color, pattern, texture, so subtly conceived that the eye cannot detect where man left off and nature took over.

If you want a Transparent Wall...

By James M. Fitch

There are many ways you can merge indoors and out, thanks to today's building technology. But before you start playing around with transparent walls, be sure you know exactly what you want. Do you want view or sunshine or ventilation or access? Or do you want all four? This is important, because if you want more than one, make sure the wall is designed to give it to you.

If outlook is all you're after, you can follow the example of the Averett house in California (opposite top). Here the fence and flowers of the garden flow right into the living room. Only an invisible sheet of glass separates the two (you can barely see the line at the carpet edge). This is a striking visual relationship. But remember, it will work only on a year-round basis when your outdoor planting maintains a year-round pattern.

If your problem is the more typical one of view and ventilation, architect Fischer's own house in New Jersey is worth your study (opposite, bottom). Here second-story living room has south-facing glass wall with a fine view. For summer comfort, half the wall slides to one side and another portion has awning-type sash. To free these moving elements of cumbersome screens, the architect has moved his screening to the eave line, creating a tree-top balcony.

Or maybe you want a disappearing wall only when the weather's nice. That was Designer Girard's problem in his own house in Michigan. He has a walled garden to the north of his living room and wanted the two merged in summer only. But, in addition to looking at the garden, he also wanted to smell its cool, scented air. His solution is brilliant —a huge, counter-balanced overhead door that swings up to convert his living room into a rain-free screened porch. In bad weather, the door is closed and concealed on the inside by sliding wall panels.

If, on the other hand, you want sun and view in cold weather and no wall of any sort in summer, the Long Island house (below) offers a smart solution. Here the dining room opens onto a screened dining porch. For summer service, safe and easy access was imperative. Hence a vertical-sliding electric window was installed. Steel-framed, weather-stripped, and glazed with insulating glass, it slides up to give a snug, winter enclosure. (Continued on page 106)

How to Curtain a transparent wall

By Sara Little

PHOTOGRAPH BY GEORGE LAZARNICK

To get full enjoyment of having a glass wall, you should be free to take the view or leave it, to admit all the light or temper it as you please. That's the purpose of these new curtain fabrics. Translucent but not transparent, their textures are a constant delight even in large areas. But they "disappear" into thin folds when you want them out of the way. When there's more sun than you asked for, draw the curtains to "turn it down." At night, draw them to shut out the blackness. They leave you in full control of your glass wall—never at its mercy.

A house is not simply hot—it is hot for definite reasons. Find them in this column.	In this column find what you can do easily in an existing house to remedy the trouble.	In this column find recommendations to keep in mind when you plan your new house.
Air in house hotter than air outdoors? Frequent on calm, summer evenings. Cause: poor ventilation, lack of wind. Principle of good ventilation: Don't rely on wind; rely on fact that warm air wants to rise. Air inside a room cannot be warmer than outdoor air if room has two big-enough openings: a high one through which warm air can rise and leave, a low one through which cooler air can come in.	Install registers in ceiling or in wall just below ceiling. Cut high transoms above doors so warm air can leave room upward, either directly to outside or up staircase to attic. Open trap doors to attic. Be sure warm air has free exit from attic to outside. ● Install attic fan. ■ Make ventilation openings in bottom of all doors leading to the outside for the cool air to enter as the warm air flows out.	Plan house for upward ventilation: two ventilation openings per room, one low, one high (clerestory window). Vent rooms to staircase. Use staircase as chimney through which warm air can flow up. Have big vent or window at top of staircase. Make ceilings high, house tall, roof tall. Use large attic vents or big attic fan. In winter all these upward channels make house unheatable, so be sure to arrange them so that they can be closed off.
Warm ceilings? Cause: heat from hot attic has crept into material of ceiling. Material holds heat long after sunset, radiates heat downward into room. (Note: heat radiation works downward just as easily as upward.) Most noticeable in bedrooms after you lie down. Get ladder and feel ceiling. Should be distinctly cooler than your hand. If it is hand temperature, this is why room is hot. If warm to touch, room is practically unlivable.	Ventilate attic. To let out hot air, enlarge attic vents and/or make air passage through vent easier by removing excessive screening and louvers. ■ Install attic fan. ● To give cooler air access to attic, keep air passage from house to attic open. (Open door or trap door.) Cool off roof by spraying with garden hose. ■ Install roof sprinkler. ■ To keep attic heat from working down into structure (ceiling of rooms below), lay reflective-foil insulation on attic floor, shiny side up. ■ Tack reflective insulation against underside of roof, shiny side up.	Attic needs not only the usual attic vent through which hot air can get out, but also another vent through which cooler air can come in. This second vent should be near floor of attic and should bring fresh air into attic directly from outside. It must close off easily for winter. ● Consider white or reflective metal roof—it keeps very much cooler than a dark one. ■ Use insulation. ■ Consider attic fan. ■ Roof sprinkler.
Warm walls? Walls of room should be cool to touch. If neutral, discomfort—if warm, serious discomfort through radiant heating. Fundamental cause: sun shining on outside surface of wall too long. Wall material soaked full of heat which it holds long after sunset. The effect is most marked on the west side of the house.	Change use of rooms. Do not use west rooms as bedrooms. Realize that south rooms are cooler in summer, warmer in winter than west rooms. ■ Shade west wall against late afternoon sun by trees or trellises with vines, or high louvered shade fence. ■ Paint west wall white. ■ Wash down west wall of house with garden hose.	Use large roof overhang to shade south wall during noon hours and west wall during early afternoon hours. ● Use planting, trellis, fence to shade west wall during late afternoon hours. ● Paint west wall white. ● In regions where summer heat is serious, use the west side of the house as much as possible for garage, staircase, baths, and halls.
Windows let in too much sun? Check west windows especially. Morning sun through east windows is not bad because mornings are cool. Noon sun through south windows is not very hot because the sun rays hit windows at a steep angle, and don't shine deep into rooms. Afternoon sunshine heats the house most.	To draw the shades does not help much. When sun rays hit the shade, they are already inside the house and deliver their heat. Use awnings or woven matting outside window. ■ Install heat-absorbing (blue) glass. ● Shading west wall (see above) will also shade west windows, and is the best solution.	Use large roof overhang on south and west to shade south and west windows during middle period of day. ● Shade west side by trees, trellis, shade wall, garage-and-breezeway. ■ Keep west windows few and small. In sunny, hot West, use a solid west wall without windows. Also shade north windows against late evening sun, especially if north side of house faces slightly northwest.
Light glare in window? Cause is not intensity of light outdoors, but contrast between brightness outdoors and dark indoors. Pupil of eye cannot adjust to light and dark at the same time.	Paint ceiling white. Paint wall opposite window white. Redecorate to make inside of room as light as possible. ■ Break additional window in another wall of the room.	Have low, broad windows showing more ground than sky. ■ Have several windows for each room, preferably on different walls, to get more indoor brightness. ● Use sloping ceilings.

check list for hot weather comfort

By Wolfgang Langewiesche

Windows let in sky glare? Stand near window on which sun is not shining. Heat glow on your face is sun heat that has been deflected and diffused by clouds and haze. This effect can occur on all sides of the house, even on north windows. Especially noticeable in regions with hazy-hot summer weather.	Draw shades on top half of window. Better still, use awnings outside the window to shield off part of your sky view. Plant trees if they will not interfere with winter sunshine on window.	Use low, broad windows rather than tall, high ones. Get more view of ground and vegetation, less view of sky. ● Use large roof overhangs on all sides of house to shield off sky. ■ In two-story houses, shield top-story windows by roof overhang; ground floor windows by broad verandas or by "eyebrows."
Air too humid? Humid air does not readily evaporate perspiration from your skin and is, therefore, one reason why you feel hot. However, air humidity is not a characteristic of the house, but of the climate. There is little you can do about it, except to install air conditioning.	Make up for the heat discomfort caused by humidity by cutting down all the more on all other sources of heat discomfort, such as poor ventilation, warm ceilings and walls, sky-glare. ● Let experts determine whether or not you have a room that is suitable for air conditioning at a reasonable cost.	Have a summer living room or bedroom in the basement, with air conditioning. Cool earth keeps basement walls cool, makes possible air conditioning with small, economical equipment. Low location of such room keeps cooled, dried air (which is heavy) from flowing away. Air conditioning will keep a basement room dry and clear of dank smell.
Not enough breeze? In a well-designed house, you need only slight air movement, even in hot weather. If you need a breeze, it is a sign that you are getting radiant heat from warm walls and ceilings. (Exception: the very hot-humid belt along the Gulf Coast.) Best answer is to correct this basic fault.	Electric fan. Don't aim it at yourself. Let it stir up air in room. ■ Place bed, chair, dining table in open doorway where breeze is strongest. ■ Check for unnecessary heat sources: Electric light bulbs heat the air and heat you directly by radiation. Effect is marked in small rooms when you are reading or working with lamp near you. Fluorescent light is cooler.	Use louvers to make more wind openings without making more windows. ■ Design breezeway inside of house. Make a lot of air pass through one narrow passage where you put bed, dining table, work table. ● Build sleeping hut of light airy structure like native huts in tropics. Place it on top of flat roof or in garden away from heat radiation of main house.
House located in extra hot neighborhood? 1. Heat radiation from near-by building heating your house? 2. House surrounded by paved roads, terraces, tennis courts, and bare spots which heat up in sun? 3. Sunshine reflected at your house and into your windows by near-by bare and hot terrain?	1. Plant trees to cut off view of other buildings. 2. Plant lawn. Use sprinklers. Plant trees for shade. Get neighbors to do the same. One owner can change "spot climate" of his property a little. Ten owners can change spot climate of neighborhood a lot. 3. Build high fence or wall; make patio.	Build in cooler spot. It is always cooler in the suburbs, still cooler in the country. It is cool during daytime near the water. (Before you buy, find out how far cool lake breeze reaches on typical hot summer day.) Dells and valley bottoms are cooler on summer nights (and colder in winter) than slopes and high spots.
Wet cellar? Dank smell? Moist, hot summer air condenses against cool cellar walls. Fungus, which grows on moist wall, causes smell. It grows especially under things like carpets, sacking, etc., which allow moist air to reach cool wall or floor without allowing air movement at same time.	Experiment with ventilation. It sometimes works, but more often not. ■ Try burning lights in cellar to radiate heat at walls. Try running electric fan. ■ Keep cellar clean. Store things on racks in middle of basement, rather than on floor and against walls. ● Close up cellar as tightly as possible and use chemical air dryer.	Have no basement. ■ Make basement walls of insulating type of concrete. ■ Use basement as underground, air-conditioned living or sleeping room for very hot weather. Conditioned and dried air will not condense on walls. See also "Air too humid?" above.

Besides providing a dramatic view of the ocean, this transparent wall blends indoors and outdoors so effectively that you seem to own everything right up to the horizon. The raised wooden terrace permits you to relax or dine on the beach, but out of the sand. More important, its design accentuates the visual perspective by drawing the eye seaward along flowing curves and zigzag lines.

Everyone lives outdoors at the beach, but few people do anything to relieve the monotony of the barren expanse of sand. Here, however, landscape architect, Thomas Church, has created an outdoor living room for Charles O. Martin which has all the visual excitement that color, pattern, and texture can produce. You can achieve the same effect by using native plants that take to a sandy environment. Instead of planting them in a four-square bed like wooden soldiers, let them follow a rhythmic curve that defines your private patch of sand and separates it from the public beach beyond.

A pool should look natural—as though it were an integral part of the landscape rather than an obvious addition to it. So its design and appearance must be keyed to the surroundings and the architecture of the house. See, for example, how the pool above is tied to the structure by the stone paths and terraces.

Pool houses today are more than convenient dressing rooms. Many of them are real playhouses—a second home where you and the family spend much of the summer. Grass-roots modern in a Midwestern farmhouse

By Kenneth Young

For a river bluff that is right out of Huckleberry Finn, architect Deknatel has designed a modern farmhouse that's as native as fresh corn and berry pie. The year-round home of the Emery Lancasters near La Grange, Missouri, this house blends old and new in a very happy fashion. The site is the kind which has always been favored by farmers along the Mississippi River. The materials, too, are old-time favorites—white oak, black walnut, and native limestone, much of it off the farm. Most traditional of all, of course, is the concept that houses should be comfortable, even luxurious, but never ostentatious. However, there's nothing old-fashioned about the way it's oriented to sun, wind, and view. Nor about the way it uses glass, insulation and electrical radiant heating to keep the indoor climate as genial in January as it is in May.

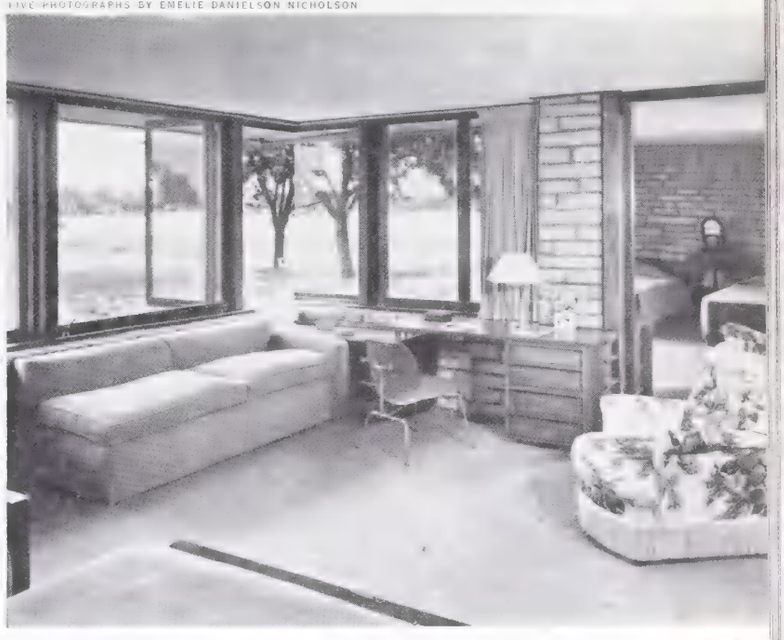
Here you are standing in the handsome stairhall, the pivot of the sprawling three-pronged plan. Straight ahead are the doors of the guest closet with guest wing corridor to their left. The open stair at right, hung from the ceiling on polished walnut boards, leads to second-floor master suite. Beyond it is main entrance door. Big living room (below) is behind you.

A sober elegance of line and texture marks the living room, whose south end is shown below. Here you see another old-time Midwestern favorite—bay windows with seats below. Modern note here lies in the greatly increased area of unbroken glass to admit winter sun and the wide overhang to exclude it in summer.

SECOND FLOOR

Second-floor suite is the master's retreat



The owners have a room as light and airy as the pilot house on an old Mississippi River steamboat—and for somewhat the same reasons. From it, they can command a view of most of their 640 acre farm—supervision that's important when a herd of blooded Angus cattle is involved. It's a large and pleasant room well isolated from guests, grandchildren, and servants on the main floor. See how, in plan at right, dressing room and bath have been placed along northwest, thus giving bedroom-study most favorable southeast exposure. As on first floor, heating here is electric-radiant.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THIS

The last word when the house was built about 25 years ago, this kitchen, by 1951 standards, met none of the requirements of life today. Thoughtful rearrangement, new equipment, care-proof materials, and gay decorations pulled it out of the doldrums and turned it into a highly efficient, attractive workroom. You can do the same if your kitchen is out of date

TWO "BEFORE" PHOTOGRAPHS BY CARL MORG

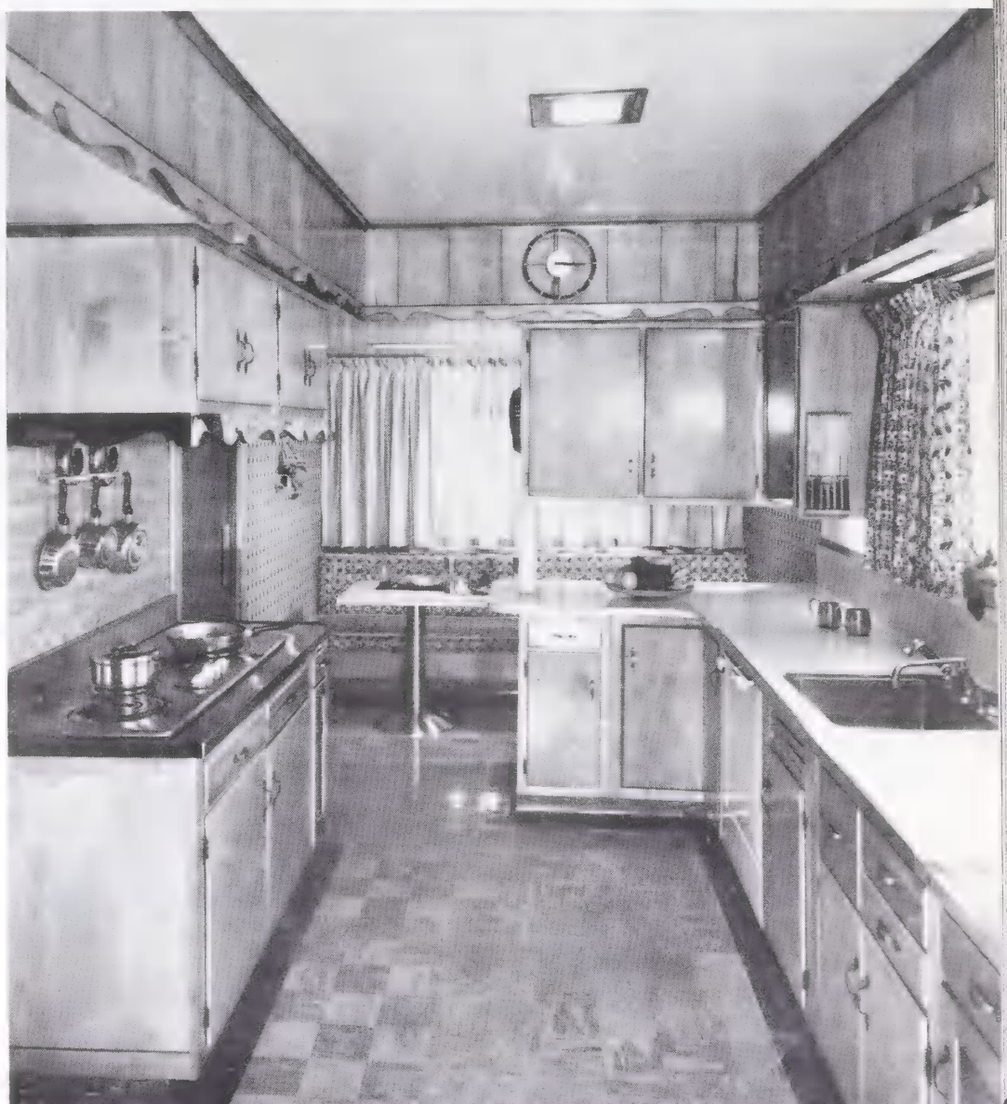
Here's what's wrong

- Cabinets built to ceiling. Nobody could reach top ones.
- No toe space for base cabinets. Toes were stubbed, arms strained because of standing too far from counter.
- No place to put things when loading, unloading refrigerator, storage at point-of-use generally inadequate.
- No heat-resistant top for pots hot off the stove, or wooden chopping block for cutting meats, vegetables, fruits.
- Too many places for dirt to collect. Ledges on paneled doors, cracks at wood counter banding, counters without backsplashes to protect walls, cracks instead of coving at edges of linoleum floor, stove legs hard to clean around.
- Unsightly exposed electrical outlet for refrigerator.
- Cook had to stand in her own light, worked in shadow, because the only light source was a fixture in center of ceiling.
- No place was provided for essential cleaning tools, mops, brooms, etc., or for needed cleaning compounds.
- No place to dry wet towels, except draped over radiator.
- Breakfast area was cramped, uncomfortable, uninviting.

KITCHEN?

By Charlotte Conway

In which kitchen would you rather work —the one on this page or the one opposite? A quick glance will tell you. Many details make the remodeled kitchen on this page more attractive and workmanlike than the original. Read on to see how the improvements made by Mr. and Mrs. Richard Chapman, in their Nappanee, Ind., kitchen may guide you in remodeling your own kitchen.



Here's what was done

To correct all the obvious "wrongs," the old abinets, so hard to clean and inconvenient to se, were ripped out and maple cabinets were ubstituted, with sliding doors, rotating shelves. ull-out towel rods, vegetable bins, divided cutry drawers for easy use, as well as for their ttractive appearance.

The new cabinets were installed in an arrangeent which guarantees the least possible time and fort on the part of anyone who works there. ow they are so convenient you could almost t a meal with your eyes closed.

Labor-saving appliances, invented since the riginal kitchen was built, were added. These clude built-in range and ovens, dishwasher. arbage disposer. The old center ceiling light xture gave way to flush ceiling lights and overounter lights for shadowless working.

Formica counter tops resist heat and stains. wood top provides a place for cutting, carving. opping. Stainless steel around the range top on't damage when hot pots are put on it. Easy-n-the-feet, resilient rubber tile with coved edges ow covers the floor. These materials were lected because they are sturdy, long-lasting nd clean easily. (Continued on next page)

Thousands of kitchens in this country are as out of date as the one shown on page 74. None of them need stay that way. A little judicious remodeling, and you'll find you're no longer a drudge. Work will go fast and easily, releasing you for other activities that attract you. Check over the list of "what's wrong" with this kitchen, see how many "wrongs" exist in your kitchen. You may be surprised into doing something about them.

If you don't know where to start, try to get the best professional advice on kitchen planning available in your community. When major structural changes are called for, such as tearing out partitions, removing closets, moving windows, doors, or plumbing lines, you'll find an architect can save you money. If it is a question of new equipment, or a rearrangement of work areas, consult your local utility company, or an appliance dealer who offers a kitchen planning service.

Pick the kitchen chore you dislike most, and the chances are there's a new appliance to do it for you. Put this one first on your list. But don't overlook any that take the drudgery out of your general routine. Select materials for counters, floors, and draperies which require a minimum of care and which can take the greatest amount of punishment. The finished job will make you wonder why you didn't remodel long ago.

The new cooking area has a built-in range, ventilator concealed under hood above, pull-out drawers for utensils where they are to be used, a pull-out rack for drying towels, and a stainless-steel top for hot pots.

Two ovens are also built-in, with adjacent maple chopping block for preparing meats or carving them after they are cooked. Blackboard is handy for family messages. Passage between range and ovens leads to front hall.

This remodeled kitchen works for the owners—not vice versa. Up-to-date equipment, materials that take a lot of punishment but require little care, and a basic plan as efficient as a production line play leading roles in the dramatic metamorphosis.

The new breakfast room invites a snack at any time of day and helps life to run smoothly, even though each member of the family has a different schedule and a different appetite. Best of all, it's only a short and quick step from range or refrigerator.

Let Seasoning be your signature

Seasoning is the magic that turns a dish into a chef d'oeuvre, a trick you learn by educating your own taste

and Alexandra Field Meyer

We all know cooks who seem to touch their food with a special kind of magic that makes it a little more delicious and a little more interesting than most other food. These are the cooks who can never quite tell you exactly what they did to the soup or the soufflé. They may remember some of the seasonings they used, but not how much or how many. They are accused of being purposely vague to guard the "secret" of their good food, but this is unjust because their only secret is a matter of wise and knowing seasoning. It may be done a little differently each time, perhaps, but it is dependent upon only two things: a real understanding of a wide range of seasonings and an educated sense of taste. The cooking itself is elementally simple.

There is no formula or rule to cover skillful seasoning, nor can we get the knowledge from cookbooks. Indeed, too many books are inclined to toss it off with an airy "season to taste" or an inadequate "season with salt and pepper." They seem to assume that either the reader has a sensitive and discriminating palate and a sure hand with seasonings, or else that seasoning isn't very important. In most cases both assumptions are wrong and the results are flat and uninteresting.

We can't rely, either, on the advertised virtues of "all-purpose" or synthetic seasonings. Old West Bar-B-Q Smoked Salt may make the steak taste like a chuck wagon special the first time, but the chances are it will grow pretty tiresome before the bottle is empty. Potpourri mixtures like "Poultry Seasoning." "Fines Herbes," and "Salad Herbs" should probably be avoided, too, as they are someone else's idea of a good mixture. Some of these, of course, are good but others are not, so if you're going to use a mixture of this kind, be sure to know your brand and buy only the best.

The business of seasoning is essentially a most personal thing. The Oxford dictionary says that to season is to "render more palatable by the addition of some savory ingredients—to mix or imbue with something that imparts relish, taste, or scent." What savory ingredient to impart the relish is your (Continued on next page)

So to learn to season skillfully we must develop an attitude toward it, made up of open-mindedness, taste (in all its meanings), and discretion. Learn what each of the many kinds of seasonings does—whether it adds zip on the robust side like cumin seeds and oregano, or whether it has a subtle and nutty flavor like nutmeg and mace. Take your time; add to your collection gradually and know each one intimately before you move to another. Then, when you have more than a speaking acquaintance with a sizable number, you can have the fun of selecting just the right seasoning for each dish as carefully as you decide which pair of shoes to wear with your favorite dress.

It is sometimes helpful to see how other cooks use the vast number of seasoners, so here are some suggestions for using many of them. (Don't overlook anything that may add a new touch to your food.)

The huge family of spices includes all herbs, spices, and aromatic seeds, so it is a good one to become familiar with first. It even includes the ever-popular chive, onion, garlic, and shallot.

Use fennel and anise to cut the salty taste of smoked herring or salmon. Add marjoram to your hashed brown potatoes. Herbs go naturally with vegetables, so try summer savory with young peas, sweet basil on tomatoes and zucchini, and tarragon and chervil with spinach. Use them in salads, soups, stews, sauces, and with meat, fish, and poultry. The best ones to use in meat dishes are the sturdier herbs like oregano, rosemary, sage, and thyme. The more delicate herbs (sweet basil, chervil, tarragon, and marjoram) are best when used fresh from the garden. And remember, when using any fresh herb, use twice as much as when you use the dried ones. In general, don't overdo herbs and don't use more than one or two in each dish, though there are some rather hearty dishes like stew that can stand three.

Spices have been widely used in America since the whaling days of New England, and they have many uses beyond the obvious spice cake and apple pie. Nutmeg is a must in many creamed dishes and soups, with squash, oysters, and on canned or cooked peaches. Try allspice in beef stew, and ginger sprinkled over a leg of lamb (well rubbed with olive oil) before roasting. Use nutmeg and Grand Marnier to spike the whipped cream for a chocolate soufflé, and chill pear or orange slices in a dressing of honey and ginger. Have a gentle hand with spices as they are deceptively strong and too much can leave a bitter taste.

Another group of spice relatives is the condiment family. These are picklings, mixtures or essence of spices like curry powder, chili powder, Worcestershire sauce, and chutney. The use of most of these is obvious in conjunction with food but don't forget their possibilities in the food itself. Curry powder dissolved in lemon is wonderful with buttery carrots. Chili powder is a superb addition to beef gravy. Worcestershire sauce does a lot for steaks and chops when it is patted into the meat before broiling. Use chutney with eggs, folded into delicious little dessert omelettes, and with fowl and lamb as well as with your curries.

Aromatic seeds aren't used enough by most people, but, once you get the habit, you'll wonder how you ever did without them. Dill goes well with sour cream (in new-potato salad and over hot or cold, cooked beets) and is delicious sprinkled over baked tomatoes. Try toasting sesame seeds in with the butter for soups or salad croutons, and put poppyseeds over boiled potatoes and noodles. Mustard seeds are good in salads, and cumin seeds on string beans.

Vinegars can also be classified as condiments, and they are very useful in cooking beyond their usual role in the salad bowl. Try vinegar in any meat gravy to cut the fatty taste and add its own touch of flavor; use it to "set" poached eggs (a teaspoon added to the poaching water) and serve some in a cruet, with crisp French fried potatoes. It adds its own piquant accent (particularly the herb vinegars) to many kinds of soups, stews, and sauces.

Another group of seasoners we are likely to overlook are the "natural foods" like cheese, sour cream, buttermilk, oranges, lemons, and limes. The best cooking cheeses are the hard, aged ones that come in big wheels and are dry enough to grate. The best of these are Romano, Parmesan, Aged Monterey Jack, and Cheddar, and they should always be grated fresh for fullest flavor. Use Parmesan or Romano grated over salads and soups and with some vegetables (grated right into the pot), and in vegetable soufflés. The yellow cheeses are best in the basic cheese dishes like fondue or Welsh rarebit.

HOW TO BE A "BORN COOK"

Those casual, perfect cooks who never need a cookbook were not really born that way. They've just mastered the principles of cookery—by trial, error, and observation

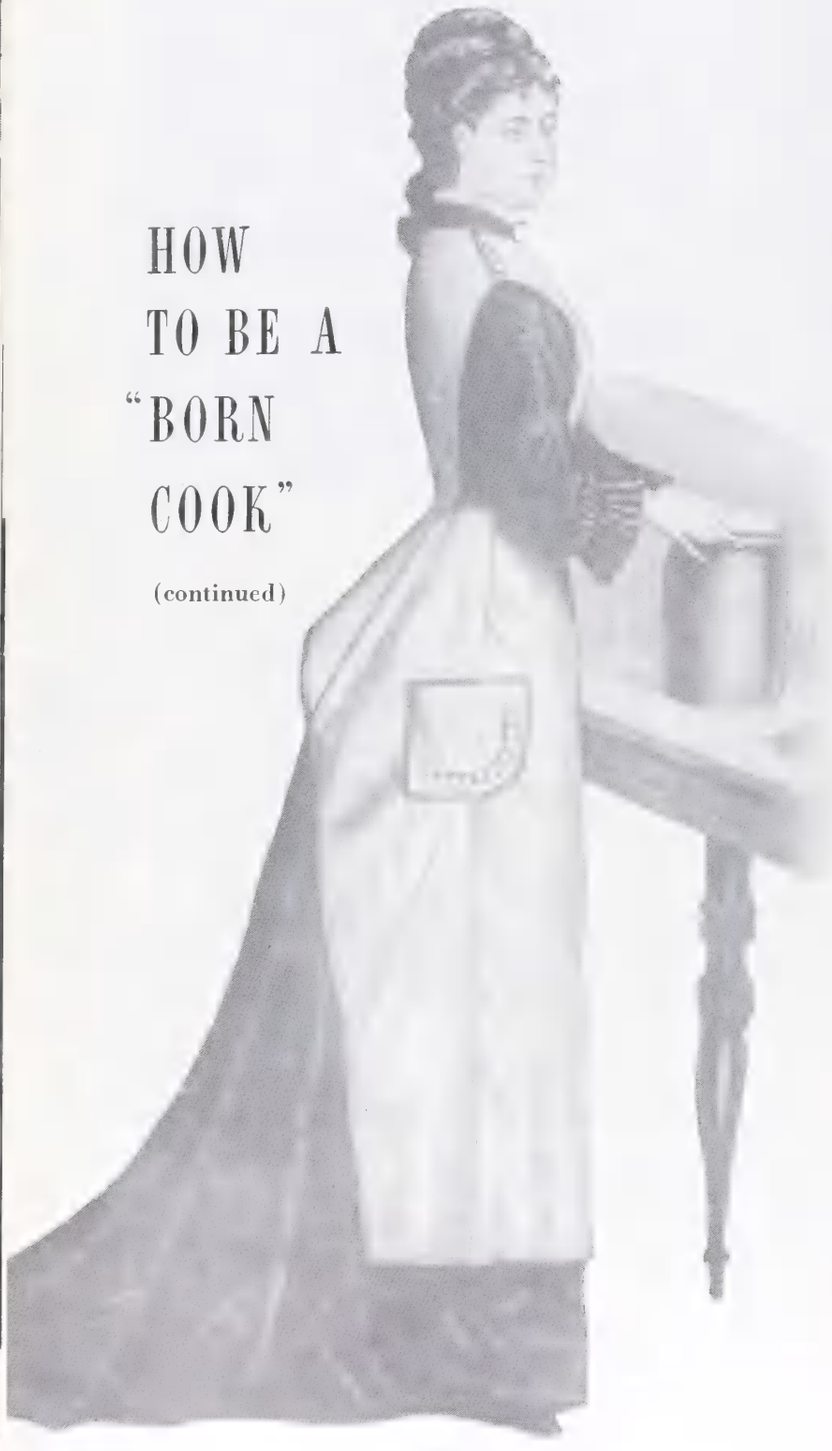
The Daily Arts of Good Living

By Jean Harris

The "born cook" is America's most famous one. Aunt Jemima is her nearest rival. It used to be that every family contained at least one "born cook," a fabulous character as much a part of American mythology as Paul Bunyan himself.

"Yes siree bobbem—a 'born cook.' "

She didn't have to do pinpoint measuring of ingredients. She didn't have to keep her nose in a recipe book. She didn't have to keep running to the grocery store. She just took what she happened to have, a little of this and a little of that, and in no time at all, dinner was ready. And what pies, what biscuits, what cakes and cookies, what fried chicken and doughnuts she could make!



We all owe a debt to her. In a country in which women are conceded the highest place, the greatest respect, and the easiest life women have had anywhere, it might be wise for some of them to remember just what is the basis of this regard. It is not "the brand of cigarettes that Mommy used to smoke," but the "pie that Mother used to make," that men cherish as the symbol of a happy childhood.

It was Fanny Farmer who scuttled the "born cook." Someone had to do it, of course. It was a normal, inevitable step, in line with what was happening in every other field of activity. Just as lumber had to be dimensioned, dresses cut according to size, and automobiles made with interchangeable parts, so recipes had to be standardized and written down, if we were to make any progress at all.

When cooking depended on skills handed down from mother to daughter, it depended on aural tradition to keep it alive. Now civilization is a matter of social inheritance, so it depends on keeping knowledge that is once found out. Aural tradition is a very poor way to accomplish that end. It is either too easily broken or else it demands a static society, in which people spend so much effort preserving what was found out in the past that they have no time to find out anything new. When knowledge is safely pickled in books, you don't have to clutter up your mind with it to keep it from getting lost. You can refer to it whenever you wish. Recipes had to be written down and made available to everyone, so that it was not necessary for you to spend your life in the kitchen in order to learn how to cook.

But there were even more important reasons than this why cooks had to learn to think in terms of level teaspoonsful instead of in pinches of this and that. All sorts of knowledge originating outside the kitchen had to be brought into it and put at the disposal of the cook. The importance of cleanliness, for example. Religion had made cleanliness related to godliness. Science had to make it related to health, and the recipe had to get the knowledge from the laboratory into the kitchen. Even as late as 50 years ago there were too many cooks who wiped things on a dirty petticoat, tasted food out of a spoon that went directly back into the pot, or arranged to make bread before they went to a party because "it made their hands so nice and clean."

Another function of the written recipe was to break down the provincialism of American cookery. The colonists had fallen for the British propaganda that the French lived mostly on frogs, so it was not until men like Thomas Jefferson went to France and liked what they had to eat there, that the upper classes became aware of the international cuisine. But it took the written recipe, the printed one, to make this knowledge generally available.

Still another function of the written recipe was to alleviate the condition of women, to provide them with a short cut to knowledge. Catherine Beecher, sister of Harriet Beecher Stowe, wrote a recipe book which was widely used all over the country in the 1840's. She wrote words of encouragement to young wives who found themselves entirely unprepared for the tasks which faced the housekeeper of a hundred years ago. For at that time wood and water had to be carried into the kitchen, and the behavior of stoves was as unpredictable as that of an opera singer, and their operation as hard to manage as a skittish horse.

Says the redoubtable Catherine, "If you have done the best you can, you have done well. If you have done well, that is all that God does ask of you and all that men should ask."

This put God on the side of the women in their fight for better working conditions in the house, a fight which paralleled the demand for better working conditions in the factory. It was the successful outcome of this fight which made possible the American kitchen of today. It gave manufacturers of kitchen equipment a goal for which to strive and, at all stages of the process, a market for their products.

But now a new situation has arisen. We have become too dependent on recipes. We have become afraid of using our heads and in great danger of forgetting how to do it. Too many cooks are like the driver who depends merely on the red and green stop and go signals, who starts up when the light turns green, without bothering to notice whether some one has attempted to steal the signal or whether all pedestrians have succeeded in getting across. Such a driver is scheduled for an accident. The intelligent motorist obeys the rules, but at the same time he keeps track of what other people are likely to do. He uses his head.

The cook must do the same thing, the more so because present-day recipes are not always a completely reliable guide. They haven't caught up with the possibilities offered by either modern appliances or materials. They haven't succeeded in integrating nutritional and gourmet standards. Our way of living demands more flexibility than can be secured from blind adherence to recipes. Modern women have got to spend a great deal less time in the kitchen than their mothers and grandmothers did, whether they want to or not.

Beware of tampering with these types of recipes

There are two kinds of reasons why certain recipes should not be tampered with. One reason involves skills of manipulating, which must be done properly if the result is to be right. The other involves scientific chemical reactions of the ingredients, which cannot be tampered with or the results will be spoiled. Follow the recipe exactly in these cases:

For reasons of manipulation and skill

Omelets
Hollandaise and mayonnaise
Meringues

For scientific reasons

Sugar cookery
Baking powder cookery

All this means that we should turn again to the standards and the methods of the "born cook," only on a higher level. It is time that you as a cook began to get some meaning out of your past experience, that you learn to carry over what you learned from one dish to the next. But where the old cooks did it unconsciously, you must learn to do it consciously.

It is easy. Just take the trouble to look up and note down the things that old-fashioned cooks carried in their heads. This is a far cry from collecting culinary formulas.

Admiration goes to the cook for the way in which she works almost as much as for what she makes. Sauce thickened with a roux is used as the basis of so many things—soups, soufflés, croquettes—that a knowledge of the basic proportions of fat, flour, and liquid makes you able to use the old cookbook injunction "flour to thicken," without using measurements.

Here are basic white sauce formulas for specific purposes:

2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 cup liquid (creamed dishes)
3 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour, 1 cup liquid (soufflés)
3 tablespoons butter, 6 tablespoons flour, 1 cup liquid (croquettes)

Some of the best cooks use cornstarch instead of flour in making sauces, because, since 1 tablespoon of cornstarch is the equivalent in thickening power to 1¾ tablespoons of wheat flour, you have the same degree of thickness in your sauce without clogging up the dish with carbohydrates. Cornstarch also makes a clearer sauce. The proportion of sauce to solids is the same for both creamed dishes and croquettes—1 cup of sauce to 2 cups of solids. (Continued on page 115)

You don't have to be extravagant to serve

Chicken in the grand manner

By Jean Harris

Wherever chicken has been eaten—in any age or any country—dishes using the breasts alone have represented the ultimate in chicken cookery. But until the modern techniques of freezing and packaging were applied to the merchandising of chicken, the breasts were also wildly extravagant. But now you can use these exciting recipes and still be as economical as your mother taught you to be. Just as most of us ordinary people now have luxuries which were the portion of only kings and potentates a few decades ago, so the food industry now lets us use chicken in ways originated by royalty and the very rich. Best of all, you can now try world-famous recipes which you previously may have felt were too rich for your modest budget—certainly your everyday budget.

All this new opportunity and new freedom is possible because chicken parts (breasts, livers, thighs, legs, giblets, and wings) can now be bought separately. This means that you may now buy only the part you want and not be faced with the problem of eating chicken until you hate the sight of it, or wasting the rest.

This progress in food merchandising releases a whole new set of cooking possibilities. Each part of the fowl becomes the key which opens the door to an entirely new set of chicken dishes. Not only this, but you may serve all guests alike. Children do not have to be tricked into preferring the neck. Father does not have to produce two wishbones from one bird.

More important, the problems of cooking are greatly simplified. For in cooking a whole chicken it is impossible to have every part properly done at the same time. When the breast is done, the rest of the bird is still tough. By the time the legs and thighs are tender, the breast has become dry and overcooked. Only by cooking parts of the same degree of tenderness at the same time can you cook each part properly. It is because the breast is so often overcooked that many people consider it dry and tasteless. But when it is properly cooked, the breast is the most tender, juicy, and delicately flavored part of the fowl.

The French call the breasts of the fowl filets, or suprêmes. There are two breast muscles on each side of the breast bone of every chicken. The words filet and suprême mean the same thing and they both include the large breast muscles called the filet and the smaller one underneath called the mignon filet. The French have a trick of serving the first joint, or the first two joints of the wing with the large breast filet attached. These are called ailerons. In The Perfect Hostess Cook Book by Mildred Knopf (Alfred H. Knopf, New York, 1950) a recipe for ailerons is called "Chicken Breasts on the Wing."

Because our methods of food preparation have accustomed us to serving the whole fowl at once, we have overlooked the fact that chicken breasts with the skins removed are one of the nicest and most easily prepared emergency dishes there are. Taken from the bone, brought to room temperature, pounded with a meat mallet, or the side of a cleaver, until they are the same thickness throughout so they will cook evenly, chicken breasts take less than ten minutes to cook and make some of the fanciest, most elegant dishes known to gastronomy.

Suprêmes are best cooked in a little fat on the top of the stove in the frying pan. They are done when they are springy to the touch and the meat has turned white all the way through. Be sure to use low heat, as they shouldn't be browned a bit, and high heat will make them tough. To keep them perfectly white, some cooks use lemon juice and cook them in clarified butter (the clear liquid of melted butter after the milky sediment has settled). But the most important thing to remember is to serve them as soon as they are cooked. They can be spoiled by even a five-minute wait.

In general, chicken breasts are cooked in clarified butter or in olive oil. They may be poached in a liquid —often wine. Or they may be rolled in egg and bread crumbs and sautéed, or fried in deep fat.

They may be served alternated with pieces of fried ham, or fried oysters, or (Continued on page 99)

If chicken parts, frozen or fresh, are still unavailable in your locality, you may have the butcher cut up several chickens, and use the breasts alone, because you can reserve the other parts for future use, either in your own freezer or in the ice-making section of the refrigerator

What to eat before you eat

To do your dinners justice, keep the* hors d'oeuvres *few but distinguished, for they should whet, not dull, the appetite

Those very clever old Chinese had a proverb, "The more you eat, the less flavor; the less you eat the more flavor." And, as usual, they were right. I try to operate by this bit of wisdom, particularly when I'm planning the hors d'oeuvres to be served before a dinner party. I say "planning"—but actually this pre-dinner fare is usually the last thing I consider. I would so much rather concentrate my efforts on running up a new and wonderful dish for the dinner itself. On occasions I have even found that I've forgotten the hors d'oeuvres until almost time for the guests to arrive—a deliberate trick of my sub-conscious, no doubt, for I have a strong conviction that canapés have ruined more dinners than poor cooks. They can dull the appetite instead of piquing it, so I would far rather give my guests too little to eat before a meal than too much. Unless you don't mind having an excellent dinner pale into insignificance, my advice is don't serve several dreamy delicacies betorehand.

I must say, however, that the food fripperies I find at most cocktail hours can hardly be called dreamy delicacies. To me they're a hoax, a snare and a delusion. Trays of beautiful-looking what-nots are passed and you think, "Boy, these really are something!" But when you bite into a tired, soggy piece of bread, shrouded with flavored gunk and glamorized with sieved egg and a caper, you're tempted to plant the rest of this taste thrill in the nearest flower pot. The hoax is that (Continued on page 93)

New background for living—outdoors

Years ago house and garden were two distinct and separate entities. You lived in the house and looked at the garden. But today this distinction no longer exists. Gardens are used for living, eating, and entertaining, and consequently need to be furnished with the same care and discrimination you would use for indoors. So in the Minneapolis, Minnesota, garden of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Sweatt, a brilliant background of color and texture is built around the new purple clematis. And as you move to the area around the pool, color is subdued and design becomes the dominant feature of a simple yet elegant setting.

When you remodel Make the outdoors as livable as indoors

Terrace and sunlight are new

When the Sweatts remodeled their suburban home, they had the forethought to visualize the project as a whole. They realized that the kind of house they were going to end up with just wouldn't fit into the existing surroundings. So they remodeled the grounds and provided a handsome background for outdoor living. These "before" and "after" photographs show how successful the transformation was. The broad, semi-circular terrace added to the porch creates a new and delightful spot in which to relax or entertain. And instead of the deep shade, trees were removed so that this area is now bathed in sunlight.

What home builders should know about

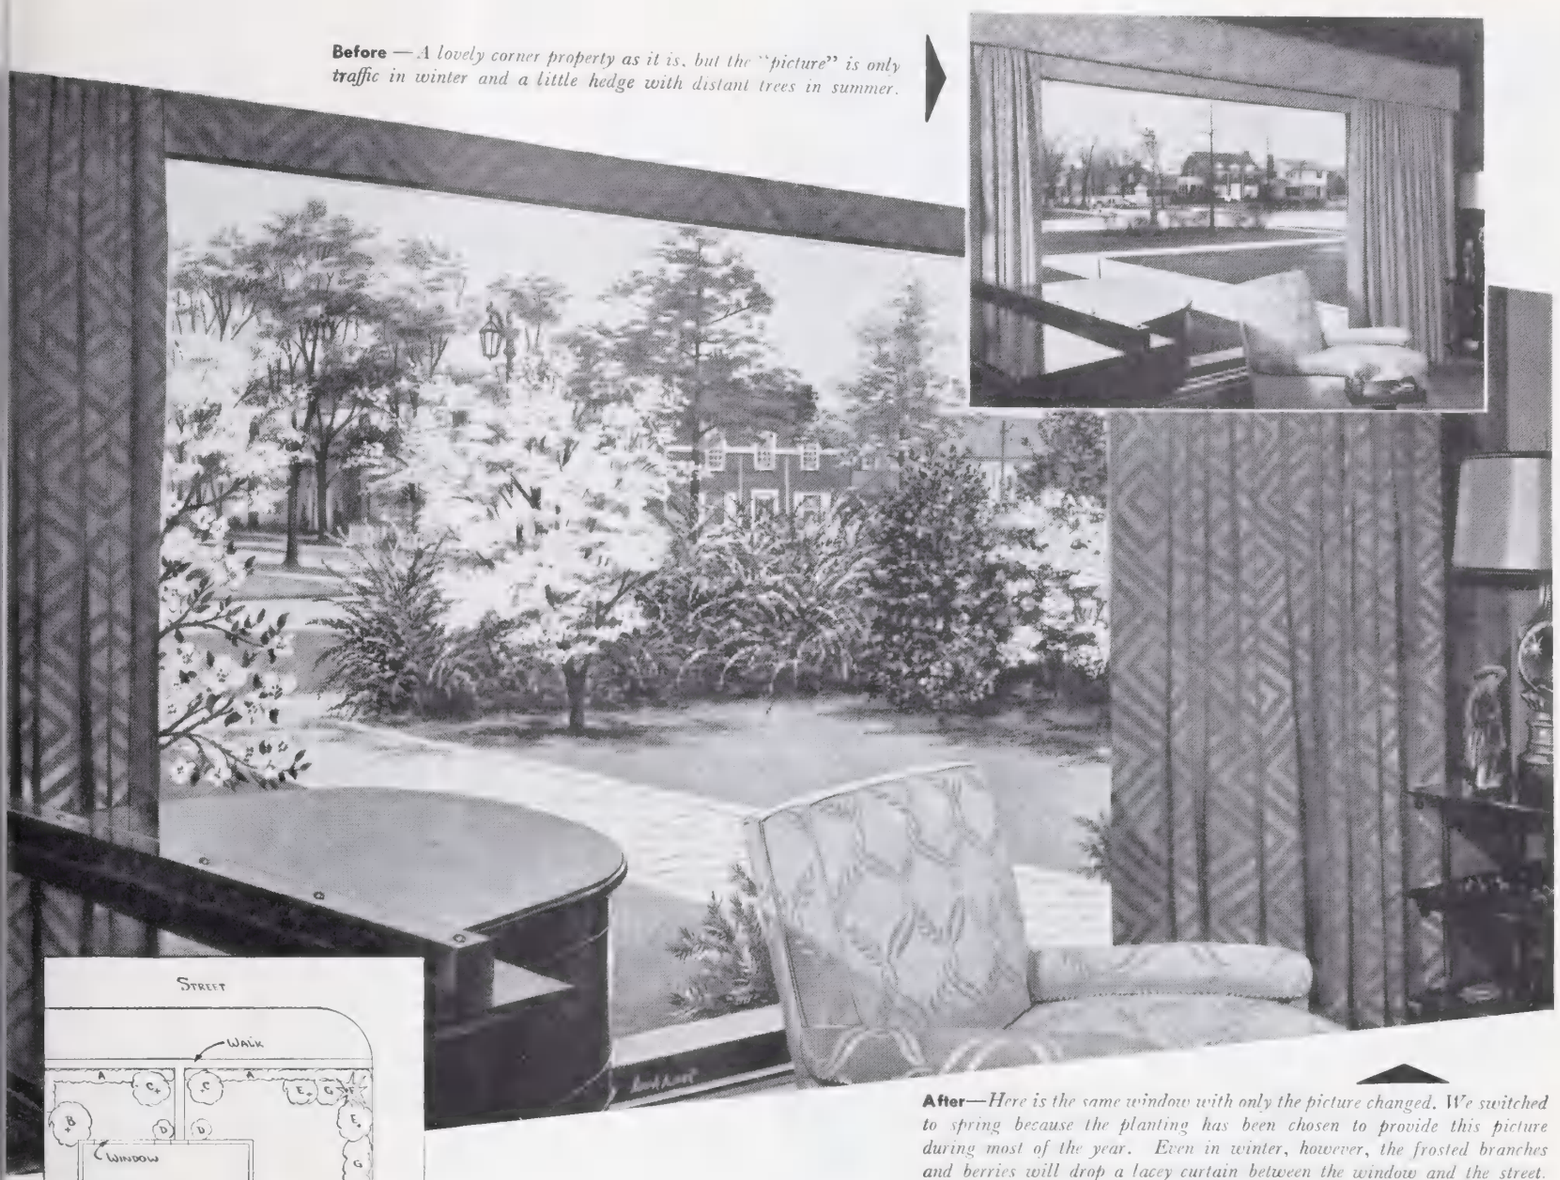
New Government Restrictions

By Miles Colean

As mobilization encroaches more and more upon the normal way of doing things, the federal government, through the National Production Authority and the Federal Reserve Board, is doing more and more of your deciding for you. The decisions that you now can't altogether make for yourself affect the cost of the house you may build, the materials you may use in it, and the amount you may borrow.

Limitations on the size of your house

In an effort to reduce the number of "luxury-type" houses, the N. P. A., early in May, made a requirement that any house costing (exclusive of land, architects' fees, and a few other minor items) more than $35,000 would have to have special authorization. Officials soon recognized that $35,000 meant different things in different parts of the country. In order to be equitable, therefore, the cost limitation has been changed to one on square feet of floor area.



Although the terms of the revised regulation were not available when this was written, they were intended, for the country as a whole, to be as generous as the cost limitation. If, however, your house exceeds around 2,500 square feet of living area, be sure that you, your architect, or your builder is familiar with the precise provisions of the rule. If the house you are planning exceeds the maximum limitation—whatever it turns out to be—you will have to obtain a permit from the nearest N. P. A. The prospect is that such permits will not be freely granted. It will be better to proceed within the limitation, reducing the area permanently or planning a small "interim" house that can be enlarged at some future time when conditions permit.

Note also: If you had cleared or graded your lot or installed any permanent materials before May 3rd, you may proceed without a permit, regardless of the cost or the size of the house. (Continued on page 123)

Before — A lovely corner property as it is, but the "picture" is only traffic in winter and a little hedge with distant trees in summer.

After—Here is the same window with only the picture changed. We switched to spring because the planting has been chosen to provide this picture during most of the year. Even in winter, however, the frosted branches and berries will drop a lacey curtain between the window and the street.

PLANTING PLAN:

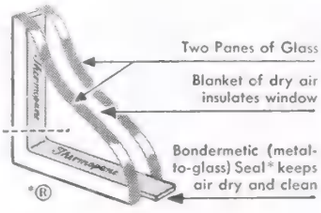
This simple planting plan, like all those in the book, was designed by a leading New York landscape architect, through the courtesy of the American Association of Nurserymen.

A—Dwarf flowering quince or Japanese Barberry hedge untrimmed B—Dogwood C—Thorns to form arch D—Japanese yew E—Holly F—Pine G—Azalea H—Japanese flowering crab.

How to Enjoy Your Window Even More

You can make it more beautiful, more comfortable. First—put a picture in it—an ever-changing mural of flowering shrubs, roses, perennials and evergreens. Even the smallest lawn can present a lovely private view outside your picture window.

One of the nation's leading landscape architects designed for us a series of basic plantings that you can adapt to complement your window. These ideas are in a beautifully illustrated 16-page booklet, "How to Put a Picture in Your Picture Window". It contains planting plans for various types of lots and detailed information about drapes and furniture arrangements. There, also, are plans to help you turn your window into a living picture of continuous beauty. Write for your copy today. It's only 10c.



So that you can enjoy more comfort and convenience, put *Thermopane insulating glass in your windows. Thermopane is two panes of glass with dry air sealed between—perfect for picture windows and large glass expanses. No storm sash are needed.

Many people have replaced two small windows with one large one, greatly improving their home. It makes the room seem so much larger, much lighter, and blends it thrillingly with the outdoors. Thermopane so reduces drafts and chilliness that you can place your furniture close to the window and enjoy far more use of your floor space in winter. This advantage is especially important in small living rooms. Write for descriptive Thermopane literature. It's free.

to him, but through the impressive unfamiliarity of whatever technical jargon he chances to hear, to misunderstand both the nature and the role of musical technique. It is likely to seem to him something of an abstraction, with an existence of its own, to which the sensations and impressions he receives from music are only remotely related, as by-products. How often, for instance, have I been asked whether the study and mastery of music does not involve a knowledge of higher mathematics! The layman is only too likely to react in either one of two ways, or in a combination of both. He is likely, that is, either to regard music as something to which he is essentially a stranger, or else to regard its generally accepted values as arbitrary, pretentious, and academic, and both to give to it and to receive from it far less than his aptitudes warrant.

"The surprising thing is that all of these conclusions are based on a mistaken idea as to the real meaning of musical 'understanding.' Technique is certainly useful, not to say indispensable, to the composer or the performer: a knowledge of musical theory is certainly an advantage to the performer and practically inescapable for the composer. But theory, in the sense of generalization, is not of the least use to the listener to practice it is a veritable encum brance if he allows preoccupatio with it to interfere with his co tact with the music as such. . . And do we seriously believe tha understanding of Shakespeare, o James Joyce, or William Faulkne has anything to do with the abilit to parse the sentences and describ the functions of the various word in Hamlet or Ulysses?"

As to that paragon of virtue, th understanding listener—

"The really 'understanding' lis tener takes the music into his co sciousness and remakes it actuall or in his imagination, for his ow uses. He whistles it on the stree or hums it at his work, or simpl 'thinks' it to himself. He may eve represent it to his consciousnes in a more concentrated form—a a condensed memory of sound heard and felt, reproduced for h memory by a vivid sensation what I may call character in sound without specific details but i terms of sensations and impre sions remembered."

The fourth stage Sessions cal that of discrimination, the develo ment of critical faculty. But th stage lies beyond our present di cussion. Much enjoyment can b discovered on the slopes of the hi before you attempt to invade th castle on the summit.

The delicious-looking stuff on the tray is an A-1 disappointment. The snare is that somebody has been trapped in the kitchen for hours cutting out those little rounds of bread and spreading them with gunk and tedious decorations. To me (and to most men, I've discovered) the results aren't even worth the chewing.

John Montagu, the fourth Earl of Sandwich, who lived from 1718 to 1792, was the inventor of the sandwich. He was at the gaming table when the butler announced, "Milord, dinner is served," but "Milord" was too engrossed in his game (I wonder if it could have been Canasta?). "Serve the dinner here," said he. This flaunting of convention threw the butler, and he started to stammer, "Milord, how can I do that—with meat and bread and—?" But the Earl shouted impatiently, "Just put the meat between slices of bread so that I can eat and play at the same time." And this is how the sandwich was born. The conversation was not recorded for posterity, but the sandwich was. How many kinds and varieties of sandwiches and how many nations enjoy them, I couldn't hazard a guess.

I DO NOT know who invented the open-faced numbers that we have today, but you find them all over Europe. Our very name for the hors d'oeuvres comes from France. There is a family in Copenhagen who has been making open-faced delicacies for 80 years. They ship them all over Europe and will also fly them to this country. I have never tried any, but the list of 169 items is most intriguing, involving caviar, eel, herring, lamb, beef, and all kinds of cheese. I hope this family has found a way to waterproof the bread. For soggy bread is the real hazard of the usual before-you-eat tidbit. It's probably this prevalent sogginess that makes most people so suspicious of the pre-dinner canapé. (You can get frozen canapés, which are polished off in your oven just before serving, eliminating the sogginess problem. Some brands are quite good and you should experiment with all those available locally. Or you can make your own canapés, and freeze them yourself, if you know how to prepare them for a last-minute crisping in the oven.)

Since the important idea behind the hors d'oeuvres is to whet the appetite of your guests, what goes before the dinner should complement the food to follow. For instance, if you are having an important shellfish dish as the first course, then you would not have fish hors d'oeuvres. Fish dulls your taste for fish. Remember, too, that the richer the dinner, the simpler the canapés should be. I really think that most guests just want something to nibble on while having cocktails and conversation.

I like to serve wooden bowls full of simple, uncomplicated bites—something off the beaten path, like Macadamia nuts or pistachios. Or a bowl of tiny red tomatoes, sometimes called cherry tomatoes. A bowl of olives or a tray of thinly sliced cheese with crackers and rye bread. These bowls or trays can be passed once or twice, then set in a convenient place so that the guests can help themselves.

I don't serve olives with pits, for the guests have to look for a place to put the pits. (I have been trapped myself.) I prefer to serve stuffed olives, and the fancier the better. A mixed pack is interesting, like "Fancifood," packed by Juilliard Fancy Food Co., San Francisco. This assortment has fancy green olives stuffed with almonds, onions, and pimentos, and is as attractive as it is delicious. To keep the olives sparkling-looking, dribble on a little olive oil and mix well.

Or you might get pitted olives, both ripe and green, and stuff them yourself. Don't say "That's too much work," for it's very easy, and if I do it, you may be sure it won't involve a lot of fuss. You simply cut slivers or sticks of celery and carrots about two and a half inches long. Stuff the carrot sticks in the green olives, leaving about an inch of carrot on both sides of the olive. Similarly, put celery sticks into the ripe olives. These make a most attractive bowl of hors d'oeuvres or a delicious decoration to a sandwich tray.

TODAY you can get many varieties of pretzel sticks. A new kind, called "Pretzel Bitz" by Zed, of Bluffton, Indiana, are small, round pretzels, and fun to eat. Reese of California puts out a small crispy cracker called "Wisecracks," and Grace Rush, of Cincinnati, Ohio, makes a delicious cracker called "Party Poops." "Tostados," fried corn meal curls, are good, too. Curried peanuts I think are divine—and, incidentally, a conversation piece. But don't serve them before a curry dinner. (Remember that old Chinese proverb.)

There are endless varieties of different things. In fact, the stores have so many new exciting products in the nibble classification that you should be able to solve this angle of party-giving without work and worry. I keep trying new things because I love variety and not because I am dissatisfied with old favorites.

I USUALLY serve just two kinds of hors d'oeuvres before dinner. Besides the bowls of nuts and crispy things I have alternates of fish or cheese. And my formula also calls for serving one hot and the other cold.

If I am having fish for the first course, I try to work in a cheese or a tomato appetizer. But if I am having a soup (not a fish soup) or a special vegetable as the first course, I will serve a fish canapé.

Whole clams or mussels, heated in butter to which plenty of chopped chives and parsley and a small clove of finely minced garlic have been added, make a delicious canapé served with soda cracker I keep them hot in a copper Frenc stove—a sort of chafing dish affa that looks rather festive. Curri peanuts pair well with this.

A fish hors d'oeuvres that I' found highly successful is smoke salmon served with icebox r bread (lightly buttered), caper freshly ground pepper, and wedg of lemons. I just set forth the ma ings and the guests help ther selves. Curried prawns (the jumb shrimp from Louisiana, Texas, a Mexico) are delicious heated butter in which curry powder h been dissolved. Stuffed olives wi this make a happy combination.

Or I may pair off olives stuff with nuts with hot hors d'oeuvr of cheese or Pizza Louisa, whi is delicious, simple to prepare, a keeps hot a long time. Anoth good combination is stuffed oliv wrapped in bacon and broiled, a Swiss cheese on rye bread finge The rye bread is spread light with Heinz's or Gulden's brow mustard, a thin slice of chee (with the holes in it) and a f paper-thin slices of radishes (wh radishes handle better for this a lso have more zing in taste). The adish gives a crunchiness to an herwise soft canapé. Another ood combination is hot cheddar eese wedges with a bowl of small erry tomatoes, well chilled.

(a thumbnail sketch for successful decorating)

● Personal color preferences and room exposure are important considerations when planning a color scheme. This lovely Chinese Modern bedroom group in ebony with gilt stripe suggests a stunning color combination: gold, Chinese red, green, white, grays, black. For rooms with little sun and light, gold or white might be chosen as the dominant color; for bright, sunny rooms, green. (Red should be confined to smaller surfaces and accents, since too much red has an effect of restlessness.) Two or three of the other colors suggested may be used with the dominant color in varying proportions. This Sieling Modern group, with your own favorite colors, will delight you for years to come.

If you think that chicken livers e just too divine, serve them only ice during the cocktail time, for ey are too rich and too delicious d guests are tempted to eat too any. I find that a few drops of mon juice just before serving ld zest to the chicken livers. ith these I serve celery sticks ell powdered with Spice Islands eau Monde, or carrot sticks gen-ously sprinkled with Spice Islands lei Yen Powder.

WITH a small group of six or eight, it is fun to have a tray of ellfish, a small bowl of sour eam sauce, small plates and fish rks, and set these out with cock-ils on the coffee table in front of e fire. This becomes a first course. ally, as I provide enough so ests can do more than nibble. ve heard that this is how they do in the Scandinavian countries. find guests are usually delighted ith this arrangement, and it starts e evening off with an interesting, expected feeling. After we eat r fill of prawns and crabs, I bring in hot well-wrung-out napkins, the way they do in Japan. The guests wipe the fish off their hands while I am whisking the remains of the fish to the kitchen, and getting the main course out of the oven.

So, you see, sometimes it is not necessary to have any hors d'oeuvres, strictly speaking.

If you are having a really large cocktail party, where people come and go, I believe in offering enough substantial food so that people who are driving from afar and whose dinner hour will be spoiled, can have enough to eat without starving before they get home. Yet, if the party is big, you don't want the problem of plates and forks. So I serve things we can eat in our fingers. I also believe in planning food so that people can help themselves. Platters that must be passed all the time are a nuisance to both guests and hostess. In a corner, I have coffee and, of course, cups and saucers and spoons. But that is all the china I have to cope with except the glasses.

So for a large cocktail party I have the bakery make hot dog rolls or Parker House rolls one quarter normal size, so they come bite-size. For the hot dog rolls, I buy those tiny hot dogs that come in jars or tins. I serve these in hot chafing dishes, with a jar of mustard, and everyone can have as much as he wants. Or I'll have the Parker House rolls sitting beside a sliced turkey or ham. Trays of thinly sliced cheese, salami, with side plates of crackers and thinly sliced rye bread are good, too. Everyone helps himself and can eat heartily if he chooses. Yet the hostess is not agitated, and the food does not get soggy or tired. All this, with the bowls of olives, nuts, and tomatoes, adds bright color to your table.

It's fun to use your imagination figuring out ways to glamorize different varieties of nuts. Ginger, Worcestershire, curry, mace, soy sauce, smoke salt, garlic salt can all be used to turn commonplace salted nuts into surprising delicacies. For instance, walnuts heated in butter with generous sprinkles of Wright's Bar-B-Q Smoke and Smoke-flavored Salt by Spice Islands; a pound of pecans heated in butter with a teaspoon of ginger or a generous amount of Worcestershire sauce (six teaspoons or more); cashew nuts heated in butter with a half teaspoon of mace—or with four teaspoons of soya sauce. They're all delicious and their novelty makes them good conversation provokers.

I have found that most people shy away from a bowl full of creamy stuff that you dip crackers or potato chips in, so I never bother to mix one up. Usually, people in large groups like to see and know what they are eating. So don't wear yourself out on something complicated, even though intriguing, for a large group. Have simple, good food, and everyone, including you, will have a much better time.

Here are some of my more successful recipes.

Curried Peanuts

Lightly cover the bottom of a medium-size frying pan with peanut oil. Dissolve 1 level teaspoon brown sugar and ½ teaspoon curry powder in the hot peanut oil. Then cover the bottom of the pan with peanuts. Stir continuously with a wooden spoon until hot to the touch. Remove from pan, spread on paper towels, and sprinkle on more curry powder. Repeat the entire process with each pan of peanuts. Once hot, they burn very quickly, so remove at once when they're hot. They keep well in covered containers. (One pound salted peanuts will serve 12.)

Pizza Louisa

3 English muffins
1 6-oz. can tomato paste
1 green onion, finely chopped
¼ teaspoon oregano rubbed in palm of hand
½ teaspoon brown sugar
Dash of Java Cracked Pepper (Spice Islands)
6 heaping tablespoons grated cheddar cheese
6 pinches of oregano

Split English muffins open with a fork. Take out a little of the center dough. Mix the tomato paste with the minced onion, ¼ teaspoon oregano, brown sugar, and pepper. Spread on the muffins about ¼ of an inch thick. Sprinkle 1 tablespoon of cheese on top and the extra dash of oregano as it comes from the jar. (I have found that Spice Islands' oregano is excellent.) Arrange muffins on the broiler rack and put in a 350° oven for ten minutes. The bottom of the oven heat should be hot and the top low. When the cheese is bubbling and the muffin is heated through, remove from oven and cut into six pie-shape pieces, and serve at once on a hot serving dish.

Hot Cheddar Cheese Wedges

1 pound cheddar cheese spread. (I like MacLaren's Imperial Cheese in glass made by Kraft.)
5 English muffins
¼ teaspoon Java Cracked Pepper (Spice Islands)
½ heaping teaspoon onion salt (Spice Islands)
¼ teaspoon garlic powder (Spice Islands)
¼ stick of butter (1/10th pound or 1 ounce)
¾ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce (Lea & Perrins)

Cream the butter, cheese, pepper, onion and garlic salts until well blended. Add Worcestershire Sauce and put in a covered container in a cool place until ready to use. Spread generously on split English muffins. The cheese should be ¼ of an inch thick. Bake in a 300° F. oven for 7 minutes. Cut in quarters, serve on a hot plate.

These cheese canapés taste almost like a Welsh Rarebit. They stay hot a long time, the cheese can be creamed ahead of time, and they are easy to prepare.

Again let me caution you against overfeeding your guests during the cocktail hour. If you want them to enjoy their dinner, follow the rule of too little and not too late. The hostess where we love to dine asks her guests for 7 o'clock. Promptly at 7:15 we go in to dinner. Another hostess asks us for 7 and we go in to dinner at 9. One might be

HIS brings up an important point. When you use chicken parts do not have the whole chicken m which to make gravy. Yet it the whole chicken, including h white and dark meat, bones, n and fat, which gives that char- eristic chicken flavor which we ericans associate with chicken. if you want to approximate the or of your mother's traditional cken dishes, while still having benefits of using frozen chicken ts, the best thing is to keep hand some canned chicken con- trate. Make the gravy from that. But to have new food experi- es, try making new things. In- d of serving your chicken with ken gravy, start serving it with erent kinds of sauces. As a rt, make a rich sauce of chicken th and cream or chicken broth l dry white wine, thickened with yolks. You may step up the oring of this with curry, with rika, with chopped hard-boiled s, with cheese. Or you may ve it as it is. Or use brown ter, or maitre d'hotel sauce ftened butter with chopped pars- , salt, pepper, and lemon juice ked into it). Or you may use auce based on sour cream (the ssian Sauce Smitane) or Hol- daise sauce.

A famous dish using chicken asts is "Chicken Divan." There restaurant in New York which kes a speciality of this simple . It is nothing but cooked breast chicken laid on top of a bed of ked broccoli. The whole thing hen covered with a cream sauce ored with sherry, covered with ted cheese, placed under the iler for a few minutes, and ught to the table sizzling hot. Specialized recipes for using cken breasts come from all over world. Here is one from China, en me by the wife of the Cali- nia artist, Tyrus Wong.

ry 1 cup of raw celery, sliced the bias, in 2 tablespoons of peanut oil. (If you have no peanut oil, say nothing and use corn oil.) Stir the celery as it cooks until it looks clear, but is still crisp. Take it out of the pan and reserve. Add 2 cups of cooked chicken breasts, sliced on the bias, 4 slices of raw pineapple, and 1 teaspoon of sugar, or 4 slices of canned pineapple and no sugar. Add ½ cup of chicken broth (it may be canned) to the pan in which you cooked the celery. Stir the mixture around until it bubbles up and the chicken and the pineapple are hot. Add the cooked celery. Then make a paste of 1 teaspoon cornstarch, 1 teaspoon soy sauce, and 1 teaspoon ginger water (made from fresh ginger the size of a walnut, crushed in 1 teaspoon of water and strained, or you can make a mixture of $\frac{1}{8}$ teaspoon powdered ginger in 1 teaspoon of water). Add this to the chicken-pineapple-celery mixture. Stir it around until the sauce bubbles up, and your work is done. Lots of fluffy white rice is the proper accompaniment to this.

"Chicken Kiev" is the Russian version of this luxury use of chicken. To make it, it is necessary to have chicken breasts with a short piece of the wing bone attached. The breast is then wrapped around a pat of sweet butter, in such a way that the finished cutlet looks like a chicken leg. Then the whole thing is breaded and deep fried. When you start to eat it, the butter spurts up, unless you know how to cut it just right. This is accomplished by sticking your fork firmly into the cutlet and making a firm gash with a knife through the whole length of it.

This is the kind of dish people like to talk about after they have returned from Europe. Learning new dishes like this makes them feel that the trip has been really worth while. But if you get a good cookbook, you can reproduce the dish, instead of merely talking about it. The Gourmet Cook Book, Gourmet, Inc., New York, 1950, will help you here.

finish up with a Crème Brulée. The Joy of Cooking by Irma S. Rombauer. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, New York, 1946, has a good recipe for this.

Here's how to go about the chicken part of this menu. Make a gravy of one cup of chicken stock (I like Derby canned chicken broth) thickened with a roux (flour smoothed in melted butter). Place this to one side. Then moisten your chicken breasts with a little melted butter and sprinkle them with Spice Islands tarragon. Sauté in heavy frying pan, cover and cook till breasts are tender. When they are done, take them off the fire and out of the pan and season with freshly ground pepper and salt. Return the gravy and ½ cup of sour cream to the pan in which the chicken was cooked. Stir it until it is hot.

Serve the chicken arranged in a circle (the French recipe books say "in the form of a crown") around the edge of a large chop dish. Fill the center with green peas. Put mushrooms and asparagus tips around the edge of the plate in little bunches, alternating with the chicken itself. Serve the gravy separately.

This dish is so delicate that it is spoiled by either mashed potatoes or rice. Serve croissants, or tiny Parker House rolls, in place of any other starch. This is not a dish for children or hungry cow hands. For them you serve chicken in other ways. But it is a very easy dish and you can produce it in a fairly short time.

Second joints are good for all the recipes for chicken sauté. They take longer to cook than the suprêmes and require more robust accompaniments. Try these with various sauces. Make a gravy of chicken broth (it may be canned), spike it with a little brandy, a few drops of lemon juice, and a little cream. Try sautéing the chicken joints without the skin. Remember, fat is a flavor! Try different fats: olive oil, half butter and half oil, half butter and half lard or beef drippings.

Drumsticks fairly shout to be broiled, or, as the English say, "grilled." The time-honored recipes for this use mustard.

Grilled Chicken Legs

Cut a few gashes in the upper parts of the legs. Rub the legs with prepared English mustard. Add flour to this, if the mixture too thin. Roll in Shredded Biscuit crumbs, which have moistened with melted butter broil. Needless to say, the or recipe called for bread cr but use Shredded Wheat cr You'll see why.

A more elaborate version

Deviled Butter

1 tablespoon butter
1 tea-spoon dry English mustard (Colman's)
1 teaspoon white wine vinegar (Sp Islands)
1 teaspoon Worchester-shire sauce
½ tea-spoon cayenne pepper
1 egg yolk

Combine ingredients to m smooth paste.

Coat the chicken legs wit deviled butter. Roll in Shr Wheat Biscuit crumbs and Salt after they are done. with slices of bacon.

Chicken legs cooked by of these methods could be s with scrambled eggs and s tomatoes.

But when you are using ch legs you don't have to c yourself to mustard as a se ing. Dip the legs in soy roll in Shredded Wheat b crumbs which have been mois in peanut oil, and broil.

Serve these with:

Chinese Sauce

1 cup canned chicken broth
4 tablespoons soy sauce
⅛ teaspoon ginger

Thicken broth with corns cook until clear. Add 2 teas of dry sherry just after t from the stove.

Either plain or fried rice be the proper accompanime

Lots of people like the ch dressing as much as the ch itself. You do not have to u whole fowl to enjoy dressing your chicken. Try stuffing th alone. Here is a stuffing will transform chicken legs party dish.

Oyster Stuffing

2 dozen oysters
2 cups finely crumbled Shredded Biscuits
2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon finely chopped parsle
1 egg yolk
½ teaspoon grated lemon rind
Oyster liquor
Salt and pepper

Chop oysters fine. Combin other ingredients. Moisten oyster liquor and the beate yolk and mix thoroughly.

ove the bones and tendons om the legs, stuff them with dressing and close the opening you would in the case of a hole fowl. Place the legs in a vered casserole with a cup of icken broth and bake in a 350° F. en for about an hour. Bake the tover stuffing in a casserole and ve it in a mound in the center a dish with the stuffed legs arnged around it. In case you don't re for the extra stuffing, make ly the amount necessary to stuff legs. Serve them as part of a xed grill of your own invention. r instance, stuffed chicken legs, utéed mushrooms, bacon, broiled matoes, sautéed chicken livers.

Stuffed chicken legs are fine serving cold. In this case, usage meat would make a good uffing, or a chopped liver mixre. Serve the cold stuffed chicken gs with either a tomato or chicken pic or with coleslaw. For a enic, team them with hard-boiled gs, the yolks of which have been ken out and mashed with butter, pper, and salt, and replaced. A ermos bottle of iced tomato juice ould go with this, little thin bread d butter sandwiches, and finger ads of carrots, cucumber, and scal celery.

Always remove the tip ends of icken wings. Use them to make ip or gravy or whatever. There practically nothing on them and ey merely complicate the matter eating. Cold sautéed or broiled ngs are nice for a picnic. Team m with celery stuffed with a xture of cream cheese and oquefort cheese.

When chicken wings are left ached to the breast muscle they ould be considered in the same tegory with suprêmes. However, u will have to supervise this ocess yourself, and frozen chicken rts do not come that way. The ngs may be stuffed, like the legs, but this is too fussy. Serve them with a stuffing cooked separately, or with rice.

Stuffing

Sauté 1 cup chopped celery and 1 cup chopped onion in 1 tablespoon of butter until done but not brown. Mix the sautéed onion and celery with ⅛ pound melted butter and 1 cup of Shredded Wheat Biscuit crumbs. Cook in a casserole until the whole is heated through. This makes a very loose, dry dressing, but it is delicious.

Whether the wings are served with dressing or rice, serve with a sauce made of ½ canned chicken broth, ½ rich milk, thickened with egg yolks and with chopped parsley sprinkled through it.

Chicken livers which you can now buy by the pound instead of "by the fowl" offer dozens of different cooking opportunities. Chopped, they make canapés, appetizers, sandwich spreads. Here are some chopped liver spreads.

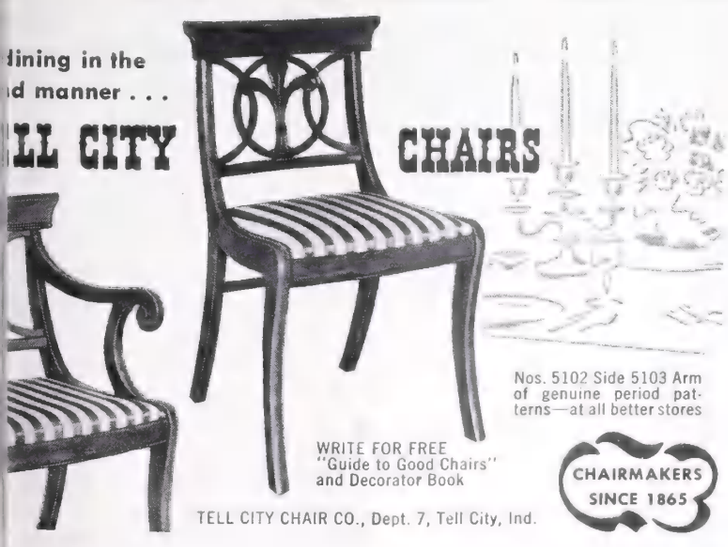
Liver Spread I

½ cup chopped cooked chicken livers
2 chopped hard-cooked eggs
1 teaspoon minced onion
Pepper and salt

Mash together and moisten with melted chicken fat (this is by far the best), or with olive oil, melted butter, or cream.

Anchovies are often used with chopped liver—an Italian trick.

Liver Spread II



½ cup chopped cooked chicken livers
3 or 4 anchovy fillets
¼ teaspoon finely minced garlic
½ teaspoon marjoram
Pepper and salt

If you don't like garlic use:

½ cup chopped cooked chicken livers
2 tablespoons parsley
2 anchovy fillets
2 teaspoons lemon juice
Salt and pepper

Moisten both of these with a little olive oil or melted butter.

Chopped chicken liver spreads belong to the family of pâtés that started out as chopped pork, developed into chopped pork liver pâtés, and went on up the escalator of elegance through chopped chicken, duck, and goose livers, finally reaching the highest development in the mousse de pâtés de foie gras. They are good at any stage on the escalator. If you run short of chicken livers, fill in with fragments of cooked tongue, bacon, ham, veal, or poultry. Even the tiniest bits of leftover meats may be kept in your freezer to be used this way.

Liver pâtés intended to be served cold taste best when thoroughly chilled. Serve your chopped chicken livers with a pile of capers on one side, and a pile of chopped hard-cooked eggs, whites and yolks separately, on the other. Liver spreads go with coarse, black rye bread (the kind known as Russian rye), dill pickles, and radishes. Next to Russian rye, crusty, sourdough French bread is the best.

Livers may be broiled with bacon, with mushrooms, or sautéed with butter. When you do this, stir a little sherry around the pan in which the livers were cooked and pour it over them.

Serve sautéed chicken livers in omelettes or with rice. Make your rice into a ring. It doesn't have to be molded—just shape it with a spoon. Put a heap of sautéed chicken livers in the center, mixed up with sautéed mushrooms, chopped olives, pieces of c bacon, fried onions and tomat Try varying this combination suit yourself.

Giblet Stew

Take two pounds of giblets in pieces. Roll them in flour, s in bacon fat, and cook gently about a quart of chicken s along with pepper and salt, a p of garlic, and an herb bunch. W done, thicken the gravy, if ne sary. Serve this with tiny bo onions, mashed potatoes, and nips. Boil rutabaga turnips potatoes separately, about quarter as many turnips as p toes. When done, drain them. them together, mash them, beat them up with hot milk butter the way you would mashed potatoes. You have n tasted turnips until you have e them this way. They are per with this dish.

Run through your fancier re books and you'll find dozens of ipes for chicken parts. A g many of the most interesting periences of traveling have t with food. But it is not neces to travel to get them. You take your family around the w right from your own kitchen you only half try. I said "The thermometer's in the 90's ...let's go to bed and stay cool!"

"And then I thought back. How home was once the last place to be—how heat and humidity saturated every corner of the house for endless weeks. Then I remembered the night Harry and I were needling our builder friend over the canasta table—why didn't they do something to make a home comfortable the year 'round? . . . and he said they had—the whole solution was Moving Air. And then he told us why and how . . .

"Early that summer we put in a floor fan that's just like a hassock, and a window fan at the end of the hall. Then, upstairs, one of the new awning fans. Ever since, the house is cool and comfortable, day and night. Now, many of our friends, seeing our comfort, have added Moving Air to their homes . . . attic fans, room air conditioners—oh, so many things!

"Everyone—remembering the old-fashioned fan—comments on how quietly and smoothly all these units run. Our builder friend says that's because we all 'looked for the *Vair*ified Tag'—bought fans with Torrington fan blades!"

TO SCREEN A TRANSPARENT WALL

Transparent walls are fine in Florida, provided they're generously shaded from summer sun and rain. But the whole wall should open up for maximum summer ventilation, and conventional screen doors are often too cumbersome. Architects Twitchell & Rudolph solved the problem neatly by screening the whole wall. The screen is stitched together vertically on selvages, like fabric.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Another Florida house by Twitchell and Rudolph has one entire wall in glass. Horizontally sliding units open onto a loggia, partly roofed (left), partly open to sky (right). This entire area is enclosed in screen mesh, so that you can open up the living room, porch, and garden into one insect-free unit.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By Julie Polshek

Summer's recent arrival put me in mind of the few months ahead when all of us perennially look for food tailored to tempt our heat-jaded appetites. So I set out to view the store scene and gather up some likely candidates.

First crack out of the box, I came upon the Ribena English black currant syrup, newly arrived from England's shores. A full-flavored, thick syrup concocted solely from black currant juice and sugar. The mellow "bite" that makes any manner of currants such a tangy delight mingles with the rich raspberry-like flavor with which black currants are endowed. The syrup might be called a non-alcoholic counterpart of Crème de Chassis, yet somehow in this pure form, the black currants have a fruitier savor. My food-adventuring zest cannot be downed, so forgive me if I call to your attention first the refreshing delight of sherbet or ice cream made with the syrup. It affords equally interesting and tasty results when used to flavor icings, toppings, and all sorts of dessert concoctions.

Its more conventional use is beverage-making. Combining two or three tablespoonsful with carbonated water and ice, creates a tall soft drink of such special palate-refreshing powers that even those who like something harder normally will give it a nod. Or better still, that group can merge it with vermouth. The resulting Vermouth Chassis is as delicious a wine concoction as you ever sipped.

To my way of thinking, a bowl of ice-cold soup occupies a niche all its own in the summer-food repertoire. Time was when the canned-soup realm offered little more than vichysoisse or conventional jellied consommés. A mighty different story these days! For instance, the jellied consommé ranks offer such sumptuous fare as Berkshire Game Farm's Jellied Pheasant Consomm and Bon Voyage Jellied Green Tu tle Consommé. Both are laced wi sherry wine. What delectable co coctions they are! It takes a jade appetite, indeed, to turn a co shoulder to tempters like these. N so glamorous, but just as deliciou is Bon Voyage's Jellied Chick Consommé.

In the realm of cream sou you'll find such interesting can dates as Bon Vivant's Cream Curry, Cream of Cucumber, bo laced with sherry wine; also th Cream of Leek and Potato, who flavor, in Bon Vivant's opinio does not need the aid of sher perhaps because of the stro flavor of the leek. It's a great de like vichysoisse, except for a mo dominant leek content. One could ask for tastier or more refreshi fare for luncheon or a dinne first course than one of these sou served chilled and garnished wi chopped chives, parsley, or roast almond slivers.

If you want the tried-and-tr vichysoisse to share the pant shelf with the others, you'll fi the Bon Voyage brand very wortl

Except for the Jellied Pheasa Consommé, which costs $2 for thr 10½-ounce cans, all of the otl soups mentioned are priced at for six 13-ounce cans. All fr Charles & Co., 340 Madison Av New York, N. Y.

Herring is one of those snack foo that belongs to any season, assu ing, of course, that you are a f low-member of the multitudino clan whose taste runs in that dir tion. There's something about vinegary zest that just touches spot for late-evening snacks or summer's night, accompanied, course, with its proverbial mat buttered pumpernickel and i cold beer. As you've doubtless s mised, I'm leading up to a herr I discovered in my travels. T find is a group of five, the Cr Brand from Hamburg, Germa It was their unusual nature t first caught my eye. The most

-ual of them all is a pack of bone-
-ss and skinless fillet of herrings in ayonnaise, of all things. I was, ankly, prepared to turn a cold oulder to such a merger. Much my surprise, however, mingling ildly-pickled herring with mayonise is an inspired idea. It will t my vote from here on. Some-w, the tang and savor of the mponents have a great affinity r each other and blend to perfec-
n. The fillets are butter-tender.
ll in all, a welcome innovation.

The herring in aspic is no munne member of the group either:
d in its own way just as delicious the fillets. The ever-so-lightly negared aspic is scattered with e tiny slices of carrots that have nt their flavor to the over-all odness of the lightly spiced gela-
e. It tastes much like solidified urt bouillon. The firm, tender eces of herring molded in it have much more delicate flavor than u'd expect with that fish. Even ose who normally don't like her-ng will vote for this version.

A third member of the family is ied herring. It's in pieces about long as your little finger. Its ur-dredged coat is fried to choco-te color in a combination of fish d vegetable oil. The dash of gar, vinegar, and spice, incorrated somewhere down the line, riches the flavor of the tasty her-ng pieces.

The Rollmops, herring slices lled around cucumber pickles, as the one that proved to be the lle of my tasting helpers and rthy of high praise. Not as un-ual as, say, the mayonnaise ver-on, but every bit as delicious.
lenty of vinegary, spicy tang in is one, plus a flavor contributed the onion slices used in the
ck. The herring slices are pickled perfection. Here's a herring that en will go for in a big way.

The Bismark herring that com-etes the group may give it a little mpetition. It, too, is peppy and ngent. The blending of vinegar d spices is mighty adept. It's lanced to provide verve without tting the vinegar's acrid edge sert itself.

Three 7½-ounce tins of fillets in ayonnaise cost $2.95. Four of ch of the others, or a like assort-
me, 415 Madison Ave., N. Y.

the Aloha shirt and native style dress, concentrate on your wardrobe for the trip over and back, and use Hawaii's excellent shops to go Hawaiian while there.

Mexico—Don't take for granted that all of Mexico, because it is south and in some parts primitive, is either warm or informal. Although lower altitudes require cool clothing, and a raincoat is a must anywhere during the summer, in high-up Mexico City you'll need your city suit and topcoat, and feel better if you wear hat and gloves and can dress a bit for evening dining.

California—Don't assume that summer clothes will take you all over this large and varied state. It's cool up in those mountains, you know, even in summer, and in San Francisco, which is coolish all the year around, July and August are definitely topcoat, even fur-jacket months.

Bermuda—Don't let the publicity pictures mislead you as to bare beach wear, brief shorts, the nonchalant T-shirt. Bermudians abhor that uncovered look, especially in their cities. So buy cover for your bathing suit, long shorts for bicycling, and remember that formal wear is required at Saturday night dances in most hotels.

North Woods—When you try on your new outfit (and do let it be wool and weatherproof), don't judge fit by appearance only. For most north woods activities you'll need room, especially at the shoulders and around your feet.

Alaska—The one certain thing about Alaska's uncertain climate is that it will probably be warmer ashore than you think. So bundle up for the deck after sundown, but don't forget that a light wool suit, or, better, a sheer, may be more comfortable in Juneau, Skagway, and even in Fairbanks, where you may just happen to find it 90 degrees above zero!

St. Lawrence country—Again, don't let direction deceive you. It may be cool on the water, particularly on the Saguenay, where you may wish for a raincoat over your topper. But Montreal and Quebec City are capable of heat waves which can make sight-seeing a sticky, miserable business unless you come prepared.

Anywhere—Don't be concerned about formal clothes unless you know definitely you will need them. Many resorts that once required them, even some lusher cruise ships, today go only so far as to demand that men wear coats in the dining room, and let you dress as you like for evening affairs.

Ride 'em, cowboy!

So full is the West of rodeos, that it's really something to be able to say you've seen the daddy of them all—Cheyenne, Wyoming's, Frontier Days. This checks off its 55th consecutive year this July 24 through 28. As befits so patriarchal a show, Frontier Days operates big scale with a cast of more than 300, enough horses and livestock for a sizable ranch, some $40,000 in prize money. It offers not one but two historical parades at ten on Wednesday and Friday mornings, Sioux Indian dances, a name band for evening dancing, and such niceties as a nursery for the very young.

As might be expected of such an event, it annually fills the facilities of even Wyoming's largest city. So write ahead, both for seat reservations and for Room Bureau service, to Secretary, Frontier Committee, Cheyenne, Wyoming.

Banff's for lingering

If you prefer to take your mountain scenery the easy way, from pavement, or from bus or launch, then plan your Canadian Rockies trip not just to see Banff, but to stay a while. For Banff, although set in some of the most spectacular mountain scenery on the continent, is in some respects surprisingly like your own home town, and just as comfortable.

If you must fish, hike, ride, of course, Banff is the guide and outfitting center for the area. But even if strolling is all you're up to, it has its own waterfall, numerous shops, a very beautiful garden, and an art school, whose students, ubiquitously putting scenery on canvas, may even inspire you to try the same. In case the fine, pine-scented air sparks you to just a little more effort, stroll down to the river for a bit of boating; rent a bicycle; try out Banff's several swimming pools, all naturally heated, one medicinal; golf on the superb course which is the pride of Canadian Pacific's big and beautiful Banff Springs Hotel. And should the scenery itself inspire closer investigation, that too can come the easy way, by bus or rented car; on Banff's new chair lift up Mount Norquay; on a launch trip up the turquoise Bow River; or you might even try the fabulous climb from Upper Hot Springs up Sulphur Mountain, most of which you do by jeep.

You'll also find Banff mindful of your budget, offering luxury at the Banff Springs Hotel, $12 up for two without meals; comfort at a number of in-town hotels, $8.50 up with bath; privacy, a view, a fireplace and modern equipment in several bungalow camps, from $5 for two to $8 and $10 for four, and economy in approved tourist homes, from $2.50.

Mission trail

No visit to California, apparently, is complete without a stop at at least one of the 21 missions which the early Spanish priests set down like stepping stones between San Diego and Sonoma.

Although Nuestra Señora de la Soledad, near Greenfield, is still in ruins, all the rest are either partially or completely restored, or their site is marked by an appropriate new building. The oldest, San Diego de Alcala, is now well restored and a public museum. The many the most beautiful is Santa Barbara, which has been continuously used and tenderly preserved. Perhaps the most poignant is Capistrano, whose courtyard, bright with flowers, aflutter with white pigeons, is a brief look into another world.

The most recently restored is San Antonio de Padua, where the Franciscans are again in charge and are bringing beauty back into being. For advance literature covering California's Mission Trail, its missions, and other attractions, write The California Mission Trail Association, 4015 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles 5, California.

Spring!

Whatever expectations sell you one of the attractive trips now available to South Africa—diamond mine, wild beast, Zulu, Victoria Falls, or just the enjoyment of an exceptionally fine climate along an exceptionally scenic coast—you gain the very definite plus of a South African spring if you time your trip for September and October. Gardeners may be aware that many of their favorites, the gladiolus, blue plumbago, many annual daisies, originated in South Africa. But few are prepared for the kaleidoscopic bloom which begins in September and colors every turn on the famous Marine Drive around the Cape Peninsula, or the mountain passes on the Garden Route east. Flowers are everywhere, from the brilliant stalls of Cape Town to the vivid Christmas-colored bougainvillea, Kafir-bloom, and flamboyant tree all over Durban. And in Pretoria in October the jacaranda tree clouds every street with misty mauve.

Whether actual reverence for history, or just a good mystery story well presented in peculiarly potent surroundings is responsible, the fact remains that "The Lost Colony," now going into its eleventh year on North Carolina's Roanoke Island, represents a unique success story in its field. This summer you'll find Paul Green's symphonic drama about the little colony that disappeared—and who knows how, or where, or why?—further polished, bigger, if possible better than ever. Performances are nightly except Mondays; Celebrity Nights each Tuesday through September 2.

Eisteddfodau

Dear to every Welshman and to every traveler with an eye to rich local color and an ear for song is the Eisteddfod (eye-sted-fod), the great singing festival unique to Wales. Actually, there are two Eisteddfodau. The International Eisteddfod, Llangollen (lan-gullen), July 3-8, includes choral and dancing groups from elsewhere. But the National Eisteddfod, in Llanrwst (lan-rist), August 6-11, is strictly Welsh, includes rituals as old as history, traditional contests in poetry, prose, song, art, presents a locally trained choir of 700 voices, and goes off, now and then, with exhilarating results, into the mass singing of Welsh hymns and folk songs as only the thrush-throated Welsh can sing them. HOW TO BE A BORN COOK

You can also season with an air of nonchalance if you remember that

1 teaspoon salt flavors 1 quart soup
1 teaspoon salt flavors 2 cups liquid in making cereals
1 teaspoon salt flavors 4 cups of flour in making doughs
1 teaspoon salt flavors 1 pound meat

But you also need to remember that salt toughens proteins, just as high heat does, so add salt to meat, cheese, and eggs only after they are cooked.

In making soups, the proportion of water to meat and bones is two to one. One bouillon cube or 1 teaspoon meat extract is sufficient for 1 cup of water or vegetable juice.

In French salad dressing the most important thing is the relation of the oil and vinegar. Three tablespoons of oil to one of vinegar is the usual one, but there is no law against your using another proportion, say four to one, if you prefer.

This is only a suggestion of the kind of information which is behind the freedom and the nonchalance of the "born cook." Test yourself. Can you tell offhand how much a cup of rice swells after it is cooked? Do you know how many beans you put to soak if you wish to serve four people? How much meat gives the protein ration for a day? How much soup makes a serving, how much fish, how many oysters? How much can you stretch a pound of mushrooms by creaming them instead of broiling?

Another source of confidence in cookery comes from familiarity with measurements so that one can transfer them from ounces to spoonsful without any fuss. In the case of liquids it is easy to master the equivalents. If necessary make out a table and keep it handy.

Table of equivalent measurements for liquids

1 quart = 2 pounds = 4 cups
1 pint = 1 pound = 2 cups = 16 ounces
½ pint = ½ pound = 1 cup = 8 ounces = 16 tablespoons ¼ pint = ¼ pound = ½ cup = 4 ounces = 8 tablespoons ⅛ pint = ⅛ pound = ¼ cup = 2 ounces = 4 tablespoons 1 ounce = 2 tablespoons
3 teaspoons = 1 tablespoon

However, this table will not work with solids as practically no two of them have the same weight. So you must use a scale if your recipes give measurements in terms of weights.

Nowadays, thanks to the way in which butter comes wrapped in quarter pounds, it is possible to measure it easily without soiling more than a knife. To get tablespoons, cut a quarter-pound bar in half for 4 tablespoonsful and in fourths for 2 tablespoonsful, etc. If you want to measure a third of a cup of butter, fill a measuring cup two-thirds full of water, then put in enough butter to bring the water to the top.

Table of equivalents for butter

1 pound= 2 cups= 4 bars
½ pound= 1 cup = 2 bars
¼ pound=½ cup = 1 bar=8 tablespoons
⅛ pound=¼ cup =½ bar=4 tablespoons

Another set of skills helps you stave off trouble, keeps your cakes from sticking to the pan, helps you get your puddings out of the mold. For instance, ordinary butter should never be used for greasing pans in which you are baking a delicate cake. The salt and the milk solids in the butter have a tendency to make the cake stick. Instead of butter, use clarified butter. To make this, melt the butter and let it stand until the salt and the milk solids have settled to the bottom. Skim off any that remain on top. After this has been done, the clear yellow fat may be poured off. As this keeps much better than ordinary butter, it may be made up and stored in the refrigerator. If you do not want to go to this trouble, use almond oil. Don't use any fat that would give the cake a foreign taste.

Either of these two fats, almond oil or clarified butter, may be used on molds in which desserts are to be frozen. When you wish to serve the dessert, wrap the mold in a towel wrung out of hot water. This will melt the thin layer of fat and the mold will slip off easily.

WHEN you are freezing a dessert in the refrigerator, line the bottom and sides of the tray with a double thickness of wax paper. Let the paper project at each side and fold it over the top after the tray is filled. This will increase the freezing time, but it will make it easier to unmold the dessert. The flaps may be used as handles with which to lift out the contents of the tray. On the same principle you put fish in a piece of cheesecloth when you poach or boil it. The cheesecloth keeps the fish from breaking when it is taken out of the pot.

The born cook is always on the alert to avoid trouble before it comes. Follow her lead. Never roll your pie crust too thin or it will break easily and make the pie difficult to serve, and absorb juices. It may make the top crust soften after the pie has cooled. Don't stretch the crust over the pan, or it will shrink in baking and you will be in trouble.

But if you do get into trouble learn to interpret what happened. Learn from your mistakes. For instance, remember that knoblike protuberances and interior tunnels in muffins come from over-beating. Rounded top, soggy layers, and uneven grain in butter cakes are the result of improper mixing of the ingredients. A coarse-grained sponge cake results from the eggs having been beaten too little; a tough one from the eggs having been beaten too much. A solid pie crust is the result of mixing the flour, fat and liquid together too thoroughly. A flaky crust results when the particles of fat are merely coated with flour and all are evenly moistened. Grainy fudge comes from insufficient beating or from starting to beat it when the candy is too hot.

BUT sometimes, as when you get too much salt in the soup, the problem is not to analyze what has happened. That is only too evident. What you want to know is what to do about it, not in the next batch but right now. You must be able to get yourself out of a tough spot by immediate action or you will have wasted both food and effort.

If food is too salty, stretch a clean cloth lightly over the container holding the food, sprinkle a tablespoon of flour over the cloth and let the food simmer a few minutes. The flour will absorb the salt. To remove salt from soup, add slices of raw potato, boil a few minutes and remove the potato which will have absorbed the salt just as raw potato fried in fat which you wish to clarify for re-use absorbs the foreign flavors and collects some of the sediment in the fat.

When custard curdles, set the pot containing it in a pan of cold water and beat the custard with an egg beater till smooth. It may not work, but it is your only chance. If there are lumps in the gravy, beat them out with a wire whisk, or put the gravy in the blender and it will be smooth in no time.

Knowledge of such things as have been suggested will help you. But most important of all is the realization of when it is safe to tamper with a recipe, and when to let it alone, of how to sense when some is going wrong with your nits, your pie, or your cake, what to do to get back on the n with it.

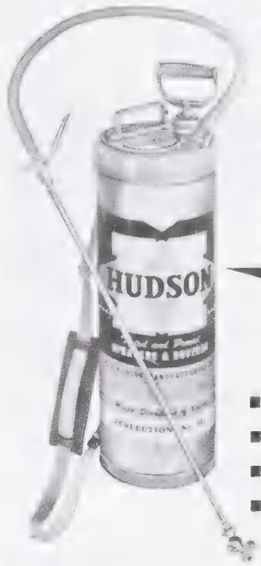
nderlying the slapdash methods he "born cook" was a sense of things should look and feel at stage in their preparation. was the result of long apprenhip, but since this system has en down everywhere else, it ld be no surprise to find that is vanished from the kitchen. cook of today must learn consly the principles which the of yesterday acquired so ually and so unconsciously they came to be merely a ck," a feeling for the right almost impossible to pass g by words.

IS a new accuracy in dealing h measurements, ingredients, methods of manipulation and ng which gives the ready-mixes miraculous quality of turning he way they are supposed to But in spite of the new improveis in this formula approach, expressed in the ready-mix, of us will always want to be to use other recipes in addito those which have become lardized.

e best cakes are more than sweet, and even in grain. r flavor is subtle, rather than ly sweet. Their texture is like velvet and they are so light delicate that they fairly melt he mouth. They have always expensive and above the lards of the average housewife, e yardsticks of economy are mirrored in the ready-mixed Those who wish to achieve ull reach and variety possible okery must lift the veil which ormula throws over reality.

successful cake depends on measurements, the ingredients, the methods of manipulation baking. In regard to measures, work carefully, and be sure your measuring utensils are ate. Standard measurements been set up for a cup, a half and so on, for a tablespoon, a teaspoon, and for the subdivisions of each. But not all of the utensils on the market are accurate. The Knox Gelatine people, for instance, do not trust you to measure a tablespoon, for just this reason. Consequently they put up their gelatine in a paper package, and refer to it as an envelope, rather than a tablespoonful. But you can see what would happen if you used a standard tablespoon of gelatine and then measured all the rest of the materials you put with it with inaccurate instruments.



We find the same difficulties when we look into the matter of ingredients. Not only are there different brands of baking powder, but there are, as every one knows, different kinds, which behave differently on account of their nature. For example, some work faster than others. Now since some of the gas formed in a dough is lost in mixing, the amount of stirring and the speed with which this is done should vary with the kind of baking powder used.

Flour is no more uniform in its make-up and behavior than baking powder. What this all means is that you must learn about the quality and behavior of your materials if you want to use them correctly. The only other alternative is to stick to abject dependence on standard formulas.

IF YOU want to take a short cut to knowledge, instead of depending on the tedious method of trial and error, your best bet is to get a book on the order of The Hows and Whys of Cooking, by Evalyn G. Halliday and Isabel T. Noble. University of Chicago Press. This book makes a new approach to cooking. Instead of merely being a collection of formulas, supplemented by "Handy Hints," it explains the chemical processes of cooking in a way that any one can understand. This provides a solid foundation on which to proceed.

If you will take the trouble to get this foundation, the chances are that along in 1990 some middle-aged man will be saying proudly, "Well now, MY MOTHER, SHE was a BORN COOK."

• Unseen fittings on the inside of kitchen cabinets have a lot more to do with convenience than you might think. Here, removable racks behind a ventilated door keep root vegetables in good condition. Other cabinets may look alike on the outside, but are different inside for specific storage of bread, flour and cutlery.

WHAT TO EAT

a little rushed with the cocktail hour 15 minutes, but it is far better to have it short than to have it for two hours, for the guests drink too much and the pace grows dull, and all the men are starved and grumbling, "When do we eat?" For a sit-down dinner I have found that half an hour is a good time to serve drinks and the few appetizers. Forty-five minutes is the outside limit on time before dining. If some of the guests are not there, don't hold the party for them, for they should not be that late, and if they are asked for 7:30 and have not arrived by 8:00 serve dinner anyway. (They should have telephoned by that time and they are very rude.) If the delay is unavoidable, serve dinner and when the late guests arrive, they can start eating what the other guests are eating. If they miss the first course, so what?

If you are having a large buffet dinner party you can be a little more lenient with the time, but the hour of cocktails is usually long enough to give the casual latecomers time enough for an aperitif

Remember that grated orange peel is an excellent addition to any fresh fruit compote, and that the juice and grated peel of a lemon

Onion Soup

4 or 5 onions peeled and sliced
4 tablespoons butter
1 quart water
1 pint strong stock (Campbell's Bouillon without dilution)
1 cup dry white wine
⅛ teaspoon salt
Pepper
1 tablespoon monosodium glutamate
Grated Parmesan cheese
5 slices French bread

Sauté sliced onions in the butter until they are limp and just beginning to brown. This should be done over a moderate flame. Then add stock, water, wine, and one slice of the bread. When the soup comes to a boil, add the seasonings and simmer for about 30 minutes. Grill the other slices of bread, buttering them generously and covering them with the cheese before you toast the second side. Put a slice on top of each bowl of soup. Serves 4.

Sour Cream Potato Salad

4-6 cups young, tender mixed greens
12 or 14 small new potatoes
2 green onions
1 teaspoon dill seeds
¾ cup sour cream
Juice of one lemon
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
½ teaspoon onion powder
¼ teaspoon celery seed
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 teaspoon monosodium glutamate

Carefully wash and dry the greens, wrap them in a towel and put them in a cold place to chill while you cook the potatoes. A good combination would be lettuce, chopped celery, parsley, watercress, and some shredded carrots. Scrub the potatoes and leave the skins on them. Drop them into enough boiling water to cover them. Cook covered until they are tender. Then drain and cool them. When you are ready to mix the salad, tear the greens into bite-size pieces, put them into the bowl, add the potatoes, peeled and sliced. Wash and peel the green onions and slice them into the bowl. Sprinkle dill seeds over salad.

For the dressing, mix the sour cream with the lemon juice, parsley, onion powder, celery seed, and pepper. Dust the greens with the monosodium glutamate, add the dressing, and toss. Serves 4.

WHAT THE HOMEBUILDER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT NEW GOVERNMENT RESTRICTIONS

The only restrictions on material that you need be concerned with are those affecting copper and aluminum. Otherwise, you may freely use anything you can find in the market.

In fact, even the limitations on these two critical metals are not particularly onerous. Take aluminum. Although manufacturers have been forced to reduce the amount of production of a large number of aluminum items to a range of 65% to 50% of last year's volume, most of those you are likely to want are still being made in considerable quantity. Aluminum windows, weatherstripping, gutters, downspouts, screen frames and screening, storm windows may still be had and used without restriction when you can find them.

Items made of copper are a little harder to get, and there are a few of them, notably copper sheets for roofing and copper tubing for radiant heating, that you are not allowed to use even if you can find the material. Beyond this there is a long list of copper articles the manufacture of which is now prohibited: gutters, downspouts, weatherstripping, thresholds, ventilators, windows, grilles, moldings, etc., but so long as these things can be found in the market they may be used without hindrance. Moreover, there is no prohibition of either manufacture or use of copper flashing or of tubing for hot and cold water for home us

Credit Controls

The only other restraints o your housebuilding activity appl to the limits on the amount money you may borrow to financ your house. Here the Federal R serve Board has set maximum loa amounts in relation to the purchas price or total cost of a new hous this time including everything land, shrubbery, structures, arch tectural work, financing and clo ing costs, etc. No loan may have repayment period of more than 2 years.

The table shown on page 90 tel the largest loan you may hope make if you are, and if you a not, a veteran of World War I Don't be too hopeful that you wi get the maximum amount state particularly in the lower cost limit Mortgage money is fairly tight rig now, and sometimes FHA or V guaranteed loans may not be eas to obtain in the amounts state Where they are not, state laws a frequently more restrictive on th ratios of non-insured loans tha the limits allowed by the Feder Reserve Board.

As things stand, the credit co trols for most prospective hom builders will give more trouble tha the other controls. If you can rai the money, you can still build good house, embodying nearly a the things you are likely to wan

BOOKS FOR GARDENERS

Turf Management, by H. B. Musser. McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., New York. 1950. $6.

The title is much too ambitious. This is a book for professional greenskeepers. It presupposes a vast experience and a complete interest in grass for golf. The book-jacket blurb couldn't be more wrong when it claims "it will be the standard authority for . . . homeowners who take pride in a beautiful lawn."

Professor Musser certainly knows his lawn care. He and Dr. Fred Grau, chairman of the editorial board responsible for publishing Turf Management as a publication of the U. S. Golf Association, are probably America's leading lawn authorities in the academic world. It is regrettable that they allowed such misleading claims about content to be made in th publisher's natural search f added book sales.

It is to be hoped that they pla to write an equally authoritati book for home lawn care someda False claims today aren't calc lated to build reader acceptance especially since the present volum is written in such an academ style. This is definitely a boo which is in dire need of a Rudo Flesch fresh-up.

Owners of home lawns will c well to stick to Dawson's Practic Lawn Craft, recently re-issued a new edition. Although it wa written for England, it remains th best lawn book for Americans use. Use it in conjunction wit Lawn Care, a monthly publicatio you can obtain without charg from O. M. Scott & Sons C Marysville, Ohio. —J. E. I

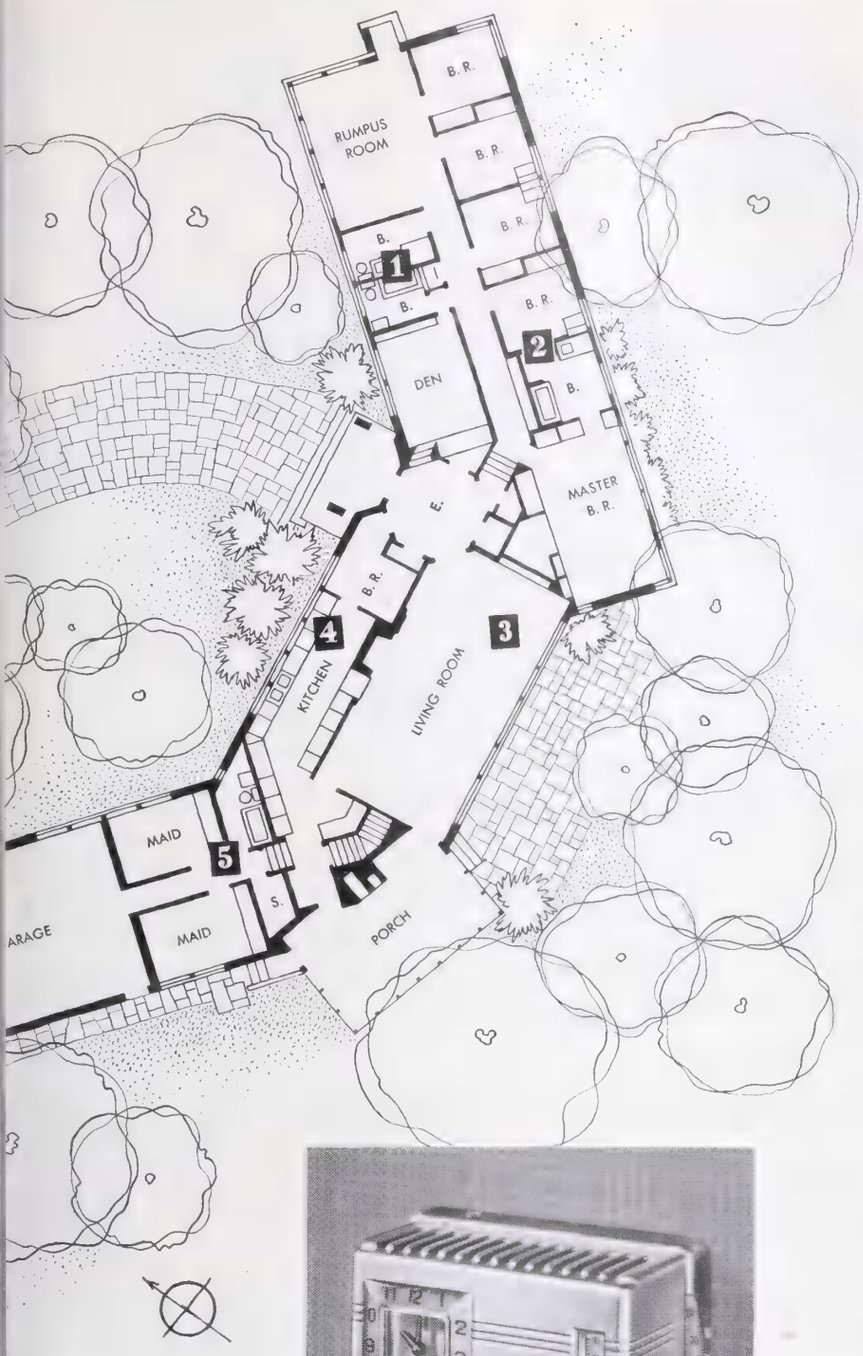
The New Trend in Temperature Control crea

A New Standard of Family Comfor

THIS handsome middle-western house overlooking two heavily wooded ravines is the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Alschuler, Jr. and their four growing children. It's a big, rambling house built to meet the needs of a busy family. And it's a house, too, where the new trend in home heating control provides comfortable, even warmth all winter long—in every room—in the most changeable weather.

When he had developed the floor plan, Mr. Alschuler, a partner in the Chicago architectural firm of Friedman, Alschuler and Sincere, realized no ordinary heating control system would do. He knew a single thermostat—no matter where it was placed—would simply be a compromise with comfort.

"We saw," says Mr. Alschuler, "that we had five separate heating problems. The only way to insure genuine comfort for all the family was to consider each area a separate heating zone."



And today, with a separate thermostat system controlling each of five zones, the Alschulers' home is comfortable throughout—in any weather.

That's why you—if you would like to have luxurious even warmth all winter long—should ask your architect and heating engineer about Honeywell Zone Control. If you have the right number of thermostats installed now, next winter you'll be able to enjoy the new standard of family comfort created by the new trend in temperature control.

THE SPACIOUS LIVING ROOM IS IN HEATING ZONE 3

Mr. and Mrs. Alschuler spend many pleasant hours in this big, modern room that overlooks the south terrace and the woods beyond. The "glass wall" admits a maximum amount of sunshine on bright winter days—thus varying the heating requirements here far more than in rooms with less southern glass area.

With one of the children watching expectantly, Mr. Alschuler pursues his favorite hobby—preparing an informal meal at the porch oven. The porch, located on the southwest, connects directly with heating zones 3 and 4—where separate thermostats meet the differing heating requirements of the two zones.

If the playroom—located on the northeast, in heating zone 1—and the southwest maid's room were dependent on the same thermostat for control, both rooms would be uncomfortable much of the time, because of the great difference in exposure. But Zone Control, with a thermostat here as well as in area 5, keeps the playroom comfortably warm for the children, and maintains any desired temperature in the maid's room.

Owners say it's wonderful because it turns down the heat—automatically—when you go to bed, and gives you a nice cool room to sleep in; turns up the heat—automatically—while you're still asleep, and your home is warm when you get up. Saves you fuel, besides! Ask your architect, heating engineer or heating dealer about the new Honeywell thermostats and other automatic heating controls that can make your heating system a better heating system. Whether you're thinking of buying a new heating plant or modernizing your present one, we think you'll be glad you insisted on Honeywell Controls.

At her desk in front of the large southeast window of the master bedroom—in heating zone 2—Mrs. Alschuler often spends the morning writing letters. On sunny winter days she would be uncomfortably warm here—without Zone Control. But with a separate thermostat system compensating for solar radiation—the temperature is just right here—no matter what weather conditions are out-of-doors.

What to do during

THE POLIO SEASON

By Doris Bernsley

How can you protect your family from the menace of polio? These summer days when the threat of it hovers in the air, most of us find this a problem of paramount concern. Here are some simple precautions you should take

You can't be too cautious during the polio season. Pay attention to all the minute details of cleanliness. Hands can carry infection, so scrub them often and use your own towels. Be sure to keep all food covered.

Be sure you and your family get plenty of rest. Fatigue can make you more susceptible to the virus.

Avoid chilling from swimming too long in cold water or sitting in wet bathing suits.

Above all, postpone mouth or throat operations during a polio outbreak. You'd run a great risk in this way of getting the most serious form.

There's no point in taking your children out of a supervised playground or camp, or preventing them from playing with their friends if polio does appear in your community. By this time they've probably come in contact with the virus and have developed some resistance.

But don't expose your family needlessly by moving them to a new area where there may be an epidemic, or by admitting new people to the family circle.

Watch closely for all symptoms. Don't ignore headache, fever, sore throat, upset stomach, sore muscles, stiff neck or back, extreme tiredness or nervousness, trouble in breathing or swallowing.

If symptoms appear, put the patient to bed at once away from others. Call a doctor immediately.

ZENITH'S NEW COBRA-MATIC Record Player with PITCH and TEMPO CONTROL!

Did you know that records should be played at exactly the same speed they were recorded? Otherwise they will be "off" not only in pitch and tempo, but in tone quality as well.

It's a little known fact, but all record players (including Zenith's prior to the Cobra-Matic) vary in turntable speed at time of manufacture and get worse as they grow older. A difference of only 1 R.P.M. (Revolution Per Minute) will make an LP (Long Playing 33⅓) record sound sharp or flat by more than a quarter tone! And two brand new phonographs may differ by almost a full half-tone in pitch!

ZENITH COBRA-MATIC is the only automatic record player that lets you play records at the exact speed for perfect pitch, tempo and timbre! It plays not only 33⅓, 45 and 78 R.P.M. but thousands of speeds between, including the coming new 16 R.P.M. Now, even your cherished old time Gold Seals, Columbias, Victors, Brunswicks, that were recorded at different speeds, can be played with perfect pitch, tempo and thrilling new tonal quality!

You must see and hear this greatest development in modern record playing before you buy any phonograph. Your Zenith dealer invites you—today.

Cobra-Matic Record Player and Black Magic TV Make Zenith the World's Greatest TV-Radio-Phonograph Combination! Illustrated—the New Zenith® "Keats," with 146 sq. in. Swedish Made "ANGEL CHIMES"

From Sweden comes this enchanting decorative innovation. Heat rising from the burning candles causes the Herald Angels to revolve lightly striking the bells with their wands. The resulting chime-like sound is charming as church bells ofar.

(THIS IS THE ORIGINAL, ONE AND ONLY "ANGEL CHIMES." IT DIFFERS FROM OTHER CANDELABRA OF ITS TYPE IN THAT (1) IT IS MADE OF HEAVY GAUGE, HIGHLY POLISHED BRASS INSTEAD OF COPPER. (2) IT HAS A TRAY BASE TO CATCH POSSIBLE DRIPPINGS. (3) IT HAS HOLDERS FOR FOUR CANDLES INSTEAD OF THE USUAL THREE. (4) IT IS IMPORTED FROM SWEDEN WHERE IT IS PRECISION MADE.

Edward MacDowell's "INDIAN SUITE"

Ever since its first performance by the Boston Symphony in 1896 this lovely and melodic suite has been a great concert hall favorite. Based on genuine Indian themes—legends, festivals, war dances, romances and sorrows. 10" A.R.S. FFR recording.

—OR—

Walter Piston's "2nd SYMPHONY"

Composed in 1943, performed by the Boston Symphony, NBC Symphony, N.Y. Philharmonic, Philadelphia Symphony and other leading orchestras — winner of the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1944-45, this richly rhythmic and melodic score has won international fame for its composer. His music has breadth. His style is concise and witty. In this symphony he has reached great powers of emotion and expression. 10" A.R.S. FFR recording.

SINCE THE LAST WAR a great musical awakening has electrified the music-loving world—a sudden realization that the foremost music being written today is American music—and that American composers have been writing enjoyable melodies, important music for the past 200 years! In all the great concert halls the most famous orchestras, conductors, soloists, chamber and choral groups are performing this music for delighted audiences.

And now an outstanding non-profit institution has embarked on a program of creating high fidelity recordings of 200 years of American music! Every form of musical expression is included in this program—symphonic, choral, instrumental and chamber works, folk-music, theatre music . . . music of America at work and at play; music of America growing, laughing . . . music born of the love of liberty and the love of fun, the love of good living and the love of God. Whatever your tastes—here is music for you!

HOW THIS MUSIC CAME TO BE RECORDED

Recently, the directors of the renowned Alice M. Ditson Fund of Columbia University awarded a substantial grant to create the non-profit Ditson Musical Foundation, whose sole purpose is to record and release each month a new high-fidelity full-frequency recording of American music, on Long Playing unbreakable records.

ARE THE RECORDS EXPENSIVE?

No, to the contrary. Because the Ditson Musical Foundation makes its recordings available at cost to the American Recording Society (sole distributing agent for the Foundation's records) they are priced below most L.P.'s of comparable quality — only $4.35 for 10" records, and $4.95 for 12" records. The American Recording Society Philharmonic Orchestra engages the finest available conductors and artists, and all recordings are made with the latest high-fidelity equipment, and pressed directly from a limited number of gold-sputtered masters.

HOW THE SOCIETY OPERATES

Your purchase of either of the Long Playing records offered above for only $1.00 does not obligate you to buy any additional records from the Society—ever! However, we will be happy to extend to you the courtesy of an Associate Membership. Each month, as an Associate Member, you will be offered an American Recording Society FFR (Full Frequency Range) recording by a famous American composer, at the special Club price. If you do not wish to purchase any particular record, you need merely return the form provided for that purpose.

FREE RECORDS OFFERED

With each two records purchased at the regular Club price you will receive an additional record of comparable quality ABSOLUTELY FREE. However, because the number of records which can be pressed from gold-sputtered masters is necessarily limited, we urge you to mail the coupon at once!

For All Company Occasions

The Book of Table Arrangements by Patricia Easterbrook Roberts. Crown Publishers, New York, 1951. 199 pages.

Carnations massed high in a cornucopia-shaped potato-ricer (lined with foil to make it watertight) can make a kitchen table set with stainless steel and earthenware on bright-striped dish towels as attractive, in its way, as fine china on a linen cloth with a fresh orchid on each napkin and orchids for a centerpiece.

Or, if a hostess confesses to a creative guest that she has nothing with which to adorn her table, well-scrubbed potatoes set on a curving line of heavy dark leaves and decorated with a string of pearls can be as effective as a woven garland of flowers laid the length of the table.

Strange materials are used on some of the table arrangements in the new book by Patricia Easterbrook Roberts. Not all could be easily copied—but that is not her intent. The illustrations are meant to suggest settings for others to devise. Many of the arrangements could be imitated only by one whose sole responsibility toward a dinner party was to create a unique and beautiful table. The use of two cement blocks, with jars inside to hold water for large low flowers, is an idea for a recent house builder.

Illustrations in color, which seem to be in demand for nearly every new book, have been introduced on eight pages here, but except for one, the potatoes and pearls, they are less pleasing than the black-and-white photographs.

New catalytic fuel oils are now available—rich heavy oil with more heat energy. The ordinary burner just can't handle these new oils without frequent service calls . . . yet OIL-O-MATIC burns them with ease. Get MORE heat per dollar!

2. Thriftily Meters Oil Drop by D-R-O-P!

No more uncontrolled oil flow . . . wasted fuel. Oil-O-Matic's exclusive "Thrift Meter" actually METERS the oil, drop by tiny drop, measures it inside the burner. You use only the exact amount of oil NEEDED to keep your home in comfort . . . as little as 2 quarts per operating hour for small homes.

3. Double-Blends Air and Oil for Hotter, Cleaner Flame!

Metered air, inside the nozzle, whips heavy metered oil to a frothy oil-air mist. This, blended with measured air outside the nozzle BOOSTS the flame to a veritable ball of fire, wringing every bit of heat from every drop of oil. Only Oil-O-Matic employs this metered oil-air double-blending process.

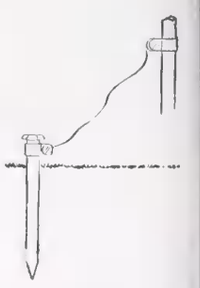
How to ground your

TELEVISION ANTENN

If you erect your own antenna, be sure to do the job right. Don't make i an invitation for lightning to strike your property



• Suburban TV owners, living outside 50-mile radius of nearest station, frequently erect extra-high antennas. As a safety precaution, they should carefully ground the masts and put lightning arresters on lead-in wires.

Every American schoolboy is brought up on the story of Benjamin Franklin—how he flew a kite in a thunderstorm, and thereby discovered electricity. But the story-tellers rarely mention that in making this important scientific discovery, "Poor Richard" barely missed death by lightning. Had the electric charge in the clouds been a little stronger, had the ground been a little wetter, Ben would have been killed right there.

Despite the knowledge we have of electricity today, there are still thousands of Americans who continue to reach for lightning, who continue to risk their lives and property unnecessarily. They are the ones who slap up a television antenna and don't take the trouble to ground it properly.

Ground it properly. Th the key words. When a TV is grounded properly, it ac lightning rod, and serves tect the entire house. Whe distance between the sta-miles. After this distance, ature of the earth gets in and you have to get higher and higher to see over the bump.

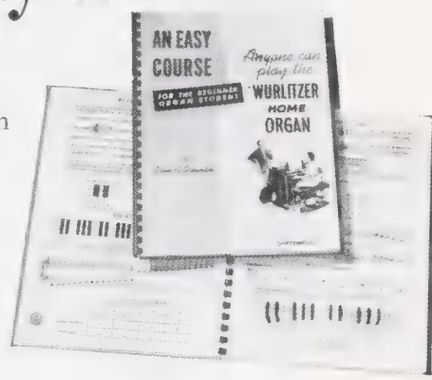
Because of these things TV-set owners erect high antennas, especially in the suburbs because of the distance from the mid-town TV transmitter stations.

Most of the set owners follow the manufacturers' instructions, and their TV serviceman's advice, and put good solid grounds on their TV masts, and lightning arresters on the TV wires. But many owners erect their own antennas, and assemble their own sets from kits. These are the gentlemen who do not always go to the extra trouble of doing a complete job, and it is to these gentlemen this advice is offered.

If you live in a large apartment house, that is one of many apartment houses in a neighborhood, the house itself, and the metal frames of the neighboring houses serve to protect you, and therefore your TV antenna ground need not be perfect.

But if your house is by itself, or on a hill so that your antenna is the highest point in the neighborhood, it becomes a natural target for lightning. Ground it properly with No. 14 solid copper wire (or heavier) to a large pipe driven deep enough to be in permanently moist ground, and the TV mast will serve as a lightning rod, and will protect the house.



■ TV antenna mast should be grounded by a length of No. 14 copper wire, or larger. Grounding wire should drop in as direct a line as possible. In all cases, a lightning arrester on wire leading from set to antenna should also be used.

What kind of music do you like?

By Richard Williams

If there is no accounting for tastes, there is also no defining of Taste. Most discussions of "What does America like?" prove to be elementary. Most definitions of our national taste mean little because they are too general. A definition to be inclusive loses the interesting details. It is like seeing the scenery from an airplane that is flying very high. The fact is, of course, that America has not one taste in music but many tastes. There is not a public for music but many publics, each with its own loves and hates. Some of them overlap; some people like both Beethoven's last (Continued on page 112)

MOZART and "P.S. 36"

Music in the public schools ranges from teaching tots the elements of rhythm to training teen-age orchestras. How good is the program in your school?

By DR. WILLIAM R. SUR, Chairman of Music Education at Michigan State College, and Chairman of Music Education Research Council of the Music Educators National Conference.

Your child may never be an All-American fullback. What's more, you probably don't care. But you do know that school sports will help develop him physically, improve his co-ordination, teach him the qualities of responsibility and co-operation that are called forth by team play. Chances are he'll never be a concert violinist either. But early training in music can be equally beneficial. And while the number of children who are physically qualified for athletics is limited, almost every child can participate in some form of music.

That's why part of the American taxpayer's money goes for music in the public schools. We are more concerned with its importance as a general educational force than as a specialized art. We aim to develop intelligent consumers rather than a few accomplished performers. Since it is not only the talented youngster who can profit from musical training, the semi-talented and non-talented deserve equal opportunity for this enrichment, just as all deserve an equal chance to learn the three R's.

The elementary school is the starting place. It is there that the foundation of the child's musical growth can best be established. It is there that the groundwork is laid for the choral, orchestral, and band activities of our junior and senior high schools, which have no equals in any other country in the world.

So let's go to "P.S. 36" with Johnny and Mary, and see what our better elementary schools are doing in music. In the kindergarten and primary grades the music program is built upon the idea of play, imagination, and imitation, since this has been the child's life before entering school.

We see the small child beginning with the simplest rhythmic movements—walking with a drumbeat or clapping accompaniment. For variety the teacher will change the tempo, while the children imitate the walking of animals and people. From these simple, (Text continued on page 125. More pictures on the next three pages.)

Teen-agers at Brooklyn's Midwood High School take orchestra practice as seriously as if they were members of the Philharmonic. The school boasts a full orchestra of 90 pieces, representing about 15 different instruments. The rarer ones, such as French horn, tuba, viola, cello, double bass, and percussion, are supplied by Board of Education, while parents co-operate with financial assistance to keep them in condition.

Twelve- to fifteen-year-olds, most of them without previous training, learn to play all kinds of instruments at P.S. 40, Bronx, N.Y., where the introduction of an extensive music curriculum has tremendously improved morale and discipline. Underprivileged children have opportunity to reveal native talents, and music activities serve as incentive to harder work in other subjects.

Eight- to twelve-year-olds at P.S. 69, Queens, N.Y., play about eight different instruments in small orchestral arrangements. Children who know a little about one instrument are encouraged to try out others. Eighth-graders get a chance to conduct. Parent-Teachers Association contributed chairs, music stands, and some needed instruments.

Six-year-olds in the first grade of P.S. 17, New York City, are introduced to rhythm through playing in toy orchestra consisting of cymbals, triangles, tambourines, drums, and bells. Teacher narrates story which is punctuated at right moment by appropriate sounds, and sometimes accompanied by song.

His guests say:

"Thank you for a lovely evening"

Song writer Jimmy McHugh hears the words of one of his own hits when he entertains in this living-dining room— planned for all kinds of music and all kinds of listening

By Marion Gough

The gregarious "Mayor of Beverly Hills" and the owner of this living room is Jimmy McHugh. the popular songwright who has endowed us with such humming material as "I Can't Give You Anything but Love, Baby," "Don't Blame Me," "I'm in the Mood for Love," "It's a Most Unusual Day." This is only a meager list of his successes, but it's enough to establish him as an expert musician, who naturally knew the score when he planned music into his own home.

Mr. McHugh is an accomplished entertainer of his friends as well as his public. He knows that music and hospitality go together like peaches and cream. But he has also observed that guests like to listen in different ways, according to the size and nature of the party itself. There are times when everyone will be delighted to give his undivided attention to a Bach fugue or a TV program, but there are other times when music should be heard but not heeded. or guests will feel miserably trapped by it.

Accordingly, Mr. McHugh and decorator Helen W. Franklin divided this room into three separate but flexible areas to meet all listening contingencies. One concentrates on music-making and close listening, with piano, television, radio, record-player, and sofa and chairs appropriately near. Facing the fire. a wing-like arrangement of sofas turns its back on the performance and suggests to guests that they're quite free to talk if they don't care to listen. Dining group is placed just far enough from the music to enjoy muted melody at mealtime.

Parties on the terrace, virtually part of this living room, borrow music from indoors. Top, TV in "music-room" area stands near window when not in use. Wheels and a 25-ft. extension cord make it movable.

PLAN BY SIGMAN-WARD

Thoughtful furniture placement provides three different music-listening areas, yet the room is unified. The McHugh art collection ties it together. Left, built-in radio, record-player, and album shelves prove a room can be packed with music-makers and not show it. Ceiling is acoustical plaster. Conversation group, below, is for those guests who can take music or leave it.

WHAT TO DO WHEN YOUR MIND

By DEEMS TAYLOR

Composer, Critic, Commentator

You are sitting, let us assume, either in a concert hall or in front of your radio set. A symphony orchestra is playing, and you are absorbed in the music—or you think you are. Then, gradually, vague scraps of thought begin to float about in your brain:

Did that telephone number begin with Plaza 5 or Plaza 9?—what a good picture that was last night—odd that Olivia De Havilland and Joan Fontaine should be sisters—such good actresses and so unalike—must remember to get a birthday present for Aunt Emma—some LP records for that new three-speed. . . .

At which point, with a guilty start, you realize that for the past six minutes you have been day-dreaming and paying no attention whatsoever to the music. Does that mean that you are such a philistine that you can't even sit through a movement of a symphony? Is serious music really over your head? What can you do about it?

First of all, put that guilty feeling aside for the moment. We'll discuss that later. Second, if you are at home, gently but firmly turn off your radio. If you are in a concert hall, go back to your day-dreaming. You heard more of that music than you think. There are, you see, two kinds of listening. One is the kind in which you consciously follow the music, consciously hear what the music has to say to you. But there is unconscious listening, too, in which, whether you know it or not, the music creates a pleasant mood. Your favorite movie probably offers a generous proportion of "background" music, which goes to work upon your emotions whether or not you consciously pay any attention to it. Your favorite restaurant may have wired music, of which you take no notice until it stops. An ever-increasing number of shops and factories are being wired for music, employers having discovered that it relieves the monotony of piecework and lessens fatigue. So don't feel too guilty about your wandering mind.

On the other hand, perhaps you might feel that there's more to listening to good music than just day-dreaming to the accompaniment of a vaguely pleasant sound. And you would be right. Why, then, did your mind start wandering at that concert when you didn't want it to wander?

There are two answers to that question, depending on whether the music you were hearing was familiar or unfamiliar. Suppose we assume that it was an old favorite, something that you had heard many times before, and knew almost by heart. Perhaps you were hearing it just one time too many. That is quite possible, you know. I still remember the season of the "Symphonic Variations." This occurred some time in the early Twenties, when I was serving a sentence as a music critic. The "Variations" is a work by César Franck, written for piano and orchestra. It is in the repertoire of most concert pianists, but is not widely played. At the time I am describing, it had not been heard in New York for (Continued on page 97)

How to buy a piano

Don't make a chore of it, since the main thing to look for is an instrument that pleases your ears. Shy away from spectacular bargains and be wary of attempts to give you the low-down on various makes

By ROY E. WAITE,
Editor of Piano Trade Magazine

Perhaps you have always imagined that selecting the right piano called for special knowledge or advice that would not be necessary in buying a fur coat, an automobile, or a diamond ring. People who don't know anything about those products buy them by the thousand every day. They simply walk into a reliable store that sells such things and pick out what suits their tastes and their pocketbooks. And that is exactly what you should do if you want to buy a piano.

Yet, for some curious reason, many who attempt to find a piano for the home soon acquire a distinct inferiority complex and wind up in a state of utter mental confusion. Most people who feel that way about it seem to have the erroneous idea that the quality of piano tone is definite and measurable, like the fineness of gold: that a jury of experts, or perhaps laboratory tests, might demonstrate that one piano has a 14-carat tone, so to speak, another an 18-carat tone, while a 24-carat tone is the supreme.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The appeal of piano tone is to the emotions. Many of the top concert artists, even those who play the same make of piano, differ in their opinion of the type of tone best suited to the virtuosity of each. It may surprise you to know that two identical pianos by the same maker may be invested with totally different tone characteristics by (Continued on page 121)

Opera Star Risë Stevens found a made-to-order niche for a small piano next to the fireplace in her bedroom. She likes to practice there in privacy rather than at the grand piano in the living room. On the bed is a life-size silver rose, symbol of one of her favorite roles, Der Rosenkavalier. It was made for her in Vienna by the jeweler to the State Opera.

WHERE TO PUT THE PIANO

By Laura Tanner

There may be no spot in your living room that will do justice to a baby grand. But that doesn't mean you have no place to put a piano. A spinet will go almost anywhere—in almost any room

Piano placement is often a poser if your pride and joy is a grand, but not if you can switch to a spinet. While the first demands both space and prominence, the latter settles modestly against less than five feet of wall. Or it can be used as a room-divider, placed at right angles to the wall and backed by a high-backed sofa or book-shelves. Place it between windows or set it into a niche made by jogs in the wall. No need to limit its prospects to living room or playroom. Put it in a foyer or in a bedroom. Treat it no differently from the way that you would a long chest.

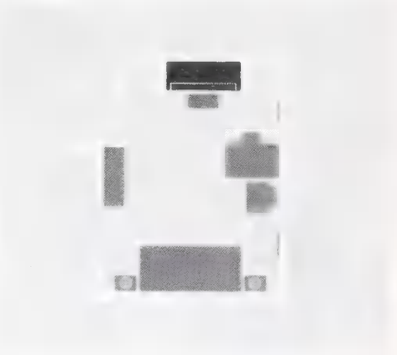
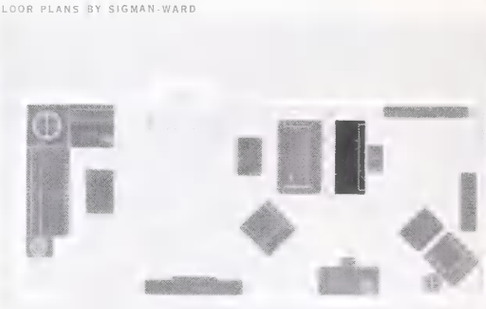
If your daughter is studying music, chances are she will practise longer and with less self-consciousness at a piano in her own room. Designer Joseph Aronson planned this room for a musical teen-ager with a built-in couch for lolling-while-listening-to-records as well as shelves for miniature collection, and Formica-topped desk and chest.

Here are more ideas on where to put a piano in four rooms of typical proportions



If you have a stairway, place a spinet against the wall below it. You can enjoy the music in both dining and living rooms, and you will have salvaged space rarely put to good use.

In many new apartments, foyer, dining, and living areas are merged in one big space. Use a spinet backed by a china cabinet to define and separate living and dining sections.



Never overlook the possibility of putting a piano in a bedroom. In this studio bedroom for a boy, the spinet fits neatly into a niche created by two built-in closets.

ROBBY'S FIRST RECORDS

They stimulate his imagination and develop his sense of rhythm and melody

The fascination of a phonograph record to your young child is something that will probably never be replaced by any other form of entertainment. From the time he is two years old until he reaches the age of seven or more, probably no other means of entertainment, whether television, radio, movies, or otherwise, will be as appealing or as lasting as the thrill and enjoyment he gets from playing his own phonograph.

This is a unique form of entertainment—because it is based on repetition. A television show generally is seen once—the same with radio and movies. But a child will listen to a phonograph record he likes a hundred times, and still not be satisfied. What a tremendous impression such records must make on a child's young mind! He hasn't just seen or heard a story or piece of music—he has memorized it. And further, dealing only in sound, not in sight, this form of entertainment has stimulated

By ALAN W. LIVINGSTON

s imaginative fancies. The pictures which the stories and usic paint are his own, not the conception of someone else. Your child's first exposure to prepared entertainment is likely be the phonograph record. If you buy him one he likes, he'll ten to it until it drives you crazy. He'll memorize it, and you ill never be quite sure just what the record has meant to m—what this stimulation of sound has created and developed his fertile mind.

Obviously, the selection of such phonograph records on our part is of extreme importance. So suppose we take the se of Robby, a child just two years old, and follow him rough a few years, and see which records he enjoys, and what ey might do for him.

At the age of two, he can enjoy rhythm, simple word pic-res, and simple melodies. This is the age at which it is easiest to make a selection, because the selection is limited to nursery rhymes and extremely simple songs and ditties. Any of the Frank Luther nursery-rhyme records are suitable. A good example is the nursery-rhyme album sung by Ken Carson. Lively march music will be appealing, but these need not necessarily be selected from packages designed for children. Such records will serve to introduce Robby to the phonograph record and cause him to accept it as a means of entertainment. It will help to develop a sense of rhythm and an ear for melody.

But it is from the age of three to six that the most can be accomplished—and Robby will most enjoy his first real exposure to such music as makes sense to him.

When Robby is anywhere between the age of three to six, the selection of records for him is not simple. There are not hundreds—there are thousands of (Continued on page 116)

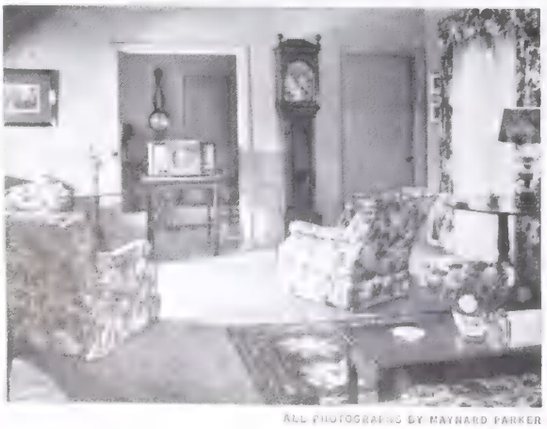
When the conductor listens



As conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Alfred Wallenstein gets plenty of exercise, so at home he likes to take his music in comfort

To Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wallenstein, music is more than an art. It is the central theme of their pattern of living. But they don't believe in being stuffy about it. They don't believe you have to perch on a delicate chair to show proper appreciation for a Bach concerto. And there's no reason why a musician should not have the same convenient storage for his paraphernalia as a lawyer has for his books or a surgeon for his instruments.

Mrs. Wallenstein, formerly a concert pianist, spends a good deal of time at the piano. But she and her husband both listen almost as much as they perform. Phonograph, radio, and television are placed where they may be enjoyed with the greatest of ease. And since the home of "the short-haired maestro" is a West Coast Mecca for most of the musical great, entertaining musicians is a big part of their life, too. But they entertain as they listen—with comfortable informality.

Television is kept on castered table in library where conductor likes to view sports. For a larger audience, it is wheeled to the doorway of the living room. (See below.)

"There's an organ in the parlor"

By JESSE CRAWFORD
Organ teacher at New York University, who popularized organ music by his performances at New York's Paramount and many other theaters throughout the United States and Europe.

"There's an organ in the parlor,
To give the house a tone,
And you're welcome every evening
At Maggie Murphy's home."

FROM AN OLD SONG

The massive "classical" pipe organ being a luxury only the very wealthy could afford, it was never possible, during my long career as a theater organist, to have an organ in my own living room. In fact, the "glamour" of that career entailed virtual slavery to the theater, since between my daily performances, I had to arrange, time, and practice the material for the following week. This could be done only after the theater closed at night—somewhere between midnight and 2 A.M.—or early in the morning prior to the first show at 10 or 11 A.M. What a home organ would have meant to me in those days, if only for practice purposes!

Now, this majestic instrument, historically of the church and more recently a feature of movie houses and other places of entertainment, has, through the advent of the electric organ, reached the home. No longer is price or size prohibitive. In fact, within the past few years, among the models developed are some costing about the same as a spinet or studio piano and requiring no more space. These developments, coupled with abundant evidence of widespread interest, lead me to hope that within my lifetime the organ may become as common to the home as the piano.

In my theater and broadcasting days, I took it for granted that the interest of most of my listeners was limited to the pieces I played and the manner in which I interpreted them. Only since my recent adventure into the field of teaching have I become aware of the frustration endured by a vast number of music lovers because of a strong, secret desire to play the organ.

Who can blame them? The organ, in my opinion, is the most satisfying of all solo instruments and, inasmuch as my passion for it has but grown greater during a career of almost four decades, my enthusiasm for the electric organ is boundless.

Let me urge those who long to learn to play the organ but are overawed by its seeming complexi- (Continued on page 114)

My rule of thumb would be: If the assortment includes Caruso "Celeste Aïda," McCormack's "Mother Machree" and Al Gluck's "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," it is an accumulatio if it includes Caruso's version of "Ingemisco" from Verdi's R quiem, McCormack's "Il Mio Tesoro" from Don Giovanni a Gluck's version of "Oh Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me?" fr Handel's Semele, it is well on the (Continued on page 9

Television has become a member of the family

Now that TV is here to stay and Hoppy's face is as familiar as Daddy's, the question is how to make this new member of the family look as settled-in as it actually is. How can you integrate a standard commercial TV with your other possessions, so that it will work with them, functionally and decoratively, to increase your enjoyment and convenience? How can you enhance its flexibility, make it easier to view wherever and however you choose? These 4 pages show you 9 effective ways to make TV thoroughly at home.

The case of the non-musical Daddy

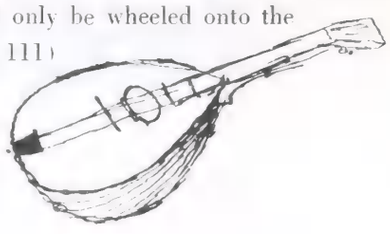
This is not a detective story, though it is written by the "Tune Detective." It is the case history of an unmusical parent who gradually discovers music

According to tradition, the least musical member of the household is John Paterfamilias, more generally and affectionately known as Daddy. Through years of cultural snubbing and being told that his taste was terrible, with an occasional reminder that man's place is in the office, he developed an inferiority complex that took all the Freud out of his life. If he ever tried any musical experiments, it was with a shamefaced fear of being called a sissy, and any attempts to guide him were probably ruined by smugly patronizing teachers who could not conceive of such a revolutionary idea as "music for fun."

Daddy's emancipation has been a slow and gradual development, but he has reached a point where he at least feels free to express himself, certainly as a listener and perhaps even as a participant.

This progress has been due chiefly to the elimination of aesthetic hypocrisy, with the resulting realization that few, if any, experts are qualified to lay down cultural laws of any kind, least of all in respect to such a fundamentally truthful art or so universally instinctive a habit as music.

So Daddy has gradually but steadily gained in confidence as well as honest enthusiasm for something that he always, confidentially, rather liked, even when he thought it was "all over his head." Today he is not likely to be overawed even by his own obviously superior wife and children.



The musical education of Daddy began by way of records and radio. He had long responded to the obvious appeal of a popular tune, and if he happened to hear a bit of actual folk music or a lively Foster song, he took it in stride. He soon found that a large percentage of the hits of the day could be traced back to "classics" of the past, and in time he developed into a fairly skillful "Tune Detective." He still gets a laugh out of remembering the time he progressed from several popular versions of the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto ("Tonight We Love," "Concerto for Two," etc.) to the real thing, recorded by Horowitz and Toscanini.

In this and other ways, the words "classic" and "classical" gradually lost whatever terrors they may have had, and Daddy found himself listening not only to Tchaikovsky but to other composers he had once lumped under the damning term "highbrow." Edvard Grieg became human by way of the musical show Song of Norway, while Chopin generated real excitement through the motion picture, A Song to Remember, with its heroic "Polonaise in A-Flat" and the irresistible "Minute Waltz." Schubert represented religion, sentiment, and melody in the easily remembered themes of his "Ave Maria," "Serenade," and Unfinished Symphony. In time the Second Piano Concerto of Rachmaninoff was added to his familiar "Prelude" as a step toward contemporary music, with Stravinsky's Petrouchka, Prokofieff's "March," and the "Polka" of Shostakovich supplying a touch of modernism.

Daddy found himself arguing hotly at a club meeting in favor of Brahms over Wagner. He began to pay attention to differences of interpretation and suddenly emerged as a violent Toscanini fan.

It was a Rotary luncheon that led to the discovery of Daddy's voice, as something more than a conversation machine. He joined tentatively in "America" and "Old MacDonald Had a Farm" and even experimented with a few tenor notes on "Let Me Call You Sweetheart." In the shower at the golf club he permitted himself a solo rendition of "Love Me and the World is Mine," and it didn't sound bad at all, especially when it was drowned out by surrounding voices.

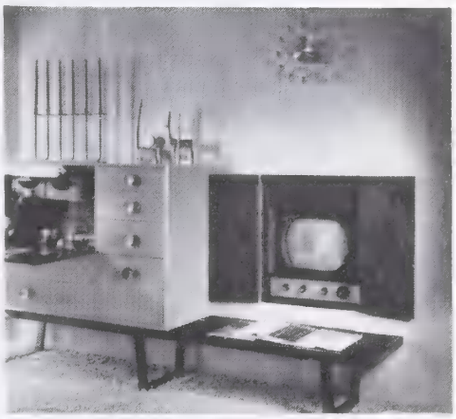
Bathroom singing had long been a family joke. Mother once suggested that if Daddy could only be wheeled onto the stage in (Continued on page 111)

Make your Television Room a "Jack-of-all-trades"

If you have a separate room for television, furnish it to func in many additional ways. This one serves also as guest bedroom, children's playroom, and family dining room

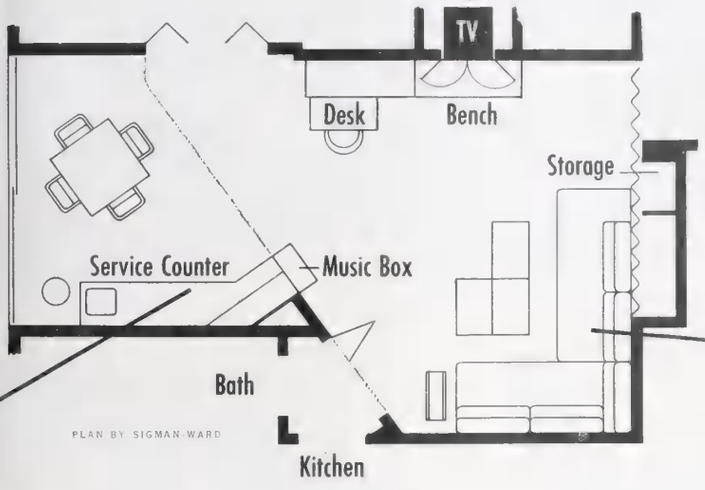
By Sara Little

If your family can't see eye to eye about when to talk, when to read, and when to look at television, that's your cue to move the set to a place apart from the general living room. But a television room needn't be an inner sanctum where everything but viewing is taboo. If you plan it carefully, you can make it serve as several extra rooms—at various hours. This one was created in a one-story development house by merging an extra bedroom with a porch. Although the television set is out of sight when not in use, it was the key to the whole furnishings plan. There is a sitting-sleeping corner with couches that convert either to chaises for televiewing or to twin beds for guests. There is a disappearing vanity for guests and a disappearing desk for household bookkeeping. There is even a dining corner which also doubles for children's playroom.



The informal dining area was created from the former porch. Door of first cabinet (above left) serves as a room divider when open, has fold-down counter-shelf attached to inside. Sliding glass walls open to terrace.

The family toy: an old Swiss music box removed from its Victorian case and mounted behind glass on top of cabinet. It plays 12 tunes when coin is dropped into slot. Dining table folds up and chairs stack to clear rubber-tiled floor for children's play.



The television set is a standard table model inserted in a wall compartment accessible from either side. Sectional storage units including drop-front desk and vanity drawer (open, below) are custom-made variations of George Nelson's designs for Herman Miller. "Come - the recorders"

—HAMLET

An ancient instrument, familiar to Shakespeare, is now enjoying a lively revival

Of all true musical instruments, the recorder is the easiest to learn to play just as it is one of the cheapest to buy. There you have the two vital reasons for thinking of this instrument (it is really a family of instruments, but we shall come to that later) as a first step in music for your children and yourself. Don't look askance at the recorder because it doesn't cost a king's ransom.

There are those who love it. There have been many, in fact, who have loved it. In sixteenth- and seventeenth-century England, it was probably the most popular instrument of all. It was a rare home that did not have a whole set of recorders. It was a rare group that did not turn to this instrument when it sought musical diversion. Henry VIII was fond of playing the recorder, and, as would befit a king given to excesses, he owned 76 recorders.

Contemporary writers mentioned the recorder often. Samuel Pepys referred to it affectionately in his diary. John Milton spoke of it familiarly. And Shakespeare had (Continued on page 98)

Do you turn up your nose at the "William Tell" Overture? Or shy away from the classics because Mozart seems dull? If so, you are missing half the pleasures of listening

By ARTHUR FIEDLER

Conductor of the Boston "Pops" concerts at which he plays Jerome Kern and Aram Katchaturian with equal zest.

What constitutes musical snobs? Where do you find them? How can you identify them? To find out, let's start with these four questions:

1. Would you be shocked to hear a Strauss waltz performed on the same program with a Beethoven symphony?

2. Do you believe that light music is all right in its place but that it is an inferior kind of music?

3. Do you believe popular music to be cheap, vulgar, or trivial?

4. Is most classical music boring to you?

If the answer is "yes" to any of these questions, you probably are a musical snob.

Actually the species is to be found everywhere, and it really does no particular harm. But an open mind toward music can make listening much more fun, and that's as true for the symphony orchestra subscriber as it is for the hillbilly addict.

Take my own case. Since my father and two uncles were all violinists in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I grew up in a long-hair atmosphere. As far back as we can trace, my forebears were musicians—most often violinists, hence the name Fiedler, the old German dialect for fiddler. My musical training was of a rather rigorous nature and I was reared pretty much on a strict diet of the Three B's (Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms). Along with my regular studies at the Boston Latin School, practicing violin and piano each day was mandatory, in addition to work in music theory and conducting.

I am certain that in my early teens I had a superior attitude about music, which might be excusable in youngsters. As I grew older it occurred to me that many of the greatest musicians had completely open minds about music. I finally came to this sort of conclusion: If a Strauss waltz was good enough for Brahms to enjoy, as we know he did, it might be good enough for me too. Since that time, I am happy to relate, I have judged and enjoyed music entirely on its own merits. Consequently, the whole world of music is open to me. I make only two demands: that the music be first-class of its kind, and that it be well performed. Under these two conditions I find that a (Continued on page 99)

How to treat the musician who comes to dinner

A former music critic and frequent host speaks as a man who has both suffered and enjoyed himself

By HENRY W. SIMON. Editor, Simon & Schuster

There is, first of all, the famous story of the wealthy social climber who asked Fritz Kreisler how much he would charge to perform for her dinner guests.

"Two thousand dollars," answered the violinist.

Somewhat staggered by the figure, but unwilling to show it, the lady said, haughtily, "You understand, of course, that I do not allow my entertainers to mingle with the guests."

"In that case, Madame," replied the unperturbed Mr. Kreisler, "my fee will be only one thousand dollars."

But let us safely assume that my reader is no gauche social climber, that she has no wish to astound the local population with the splendor of a name, but that she merely wishes to make some touring artist or friend of a friend feel comfortable and at home for an evening, and that she would like to have the evening go as well as possible for him, for her other guests, and for herself. That, I take it, is the primary purpose of most American dinner parties.

It is not entirely safe to say to oneself, "A musician is, after all, just another human being. I'll do just the same as I did when we had in the boss, the doctor, and the college professor." Two aspects of the musician's career are likely to make him peculiarly cosmopolitan in tastes and outlook. The first is that his language—music—is pretty universal, and he is used to speaking and hearing in that universal language. The second is that the nature of his profession calls for wide travel. Unless he is a church organist or exclusively a teacher, he is likely to have spent a large part of his adult life in foreign parts. Marines, of course, are said to have a similar circumstance operative in their calling. But Marines (Continued on page 109)

Consider the lily—the new hybrid garden lily. Why struggle further with the unpredictable whims of the wild lilies? Yes, most of the lilies in the gardens of America and in the catalogs are still identical to those growing in the wild. The seven new, long-blooming lilies shown here are true hybrids. They combine the strength of a number of parents. They thrive and multiply under almost any conditions. The Rainbow hybrids (cross of candlestick and elegans) are almost foolproof. But all seven are so sturdy that they do not need staking or any pampering.

Why did we have to wait so long for hybrid lilies? First, of course, because even the native forms of such wild lilies as regal, tiger, and candlestick are amazingly beautiful—and reasonably garden-hardy when pampered. But the main cause of delay was the plant breeders inability to force the wild lilies to hybridize with each other. Then, too, lily seedlings succumb readily to a host of troubles, which, of course, is why you buy the bulbs rather than try to grow lilies (Continued on page 131)

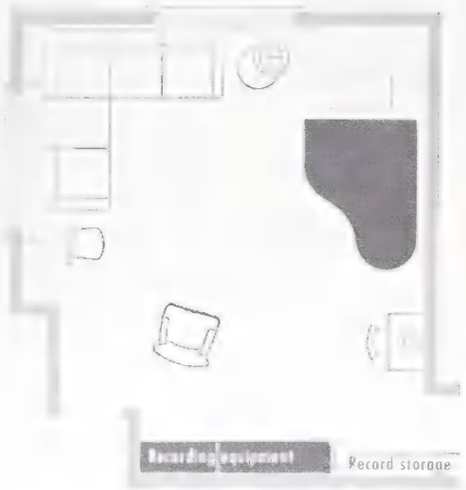
You don't need much space for a Working Music Room

Dinah Shore's workroom is a perfect piece of planning for professional music-making. But to home-base musicians, it's encouraging evidence that you can take music seriously in a small living room without being overwhelmed by equipment

The music room of Mr. and Mrs. George Montgomery of Encino, Calif. is also Dinah Shore's workshop—Mrs. Montgomery being none other than Dinah Shore herself. In this sociable little sitting room the singer practices and records many of those dulcet songs which have made her the darling of G.I.s, disk jockeys, and the listening population at large.

From the professional standpoint, this is as businesslike a set-up as a sound studio, equipped with piano, recording and play-back devices, and a bonanza of storage space for musical scores and albums, all placed for acoustical excellence and efficiency. Miss Shore could make all her recordings right here, except for those with full orchestral accompaniment.

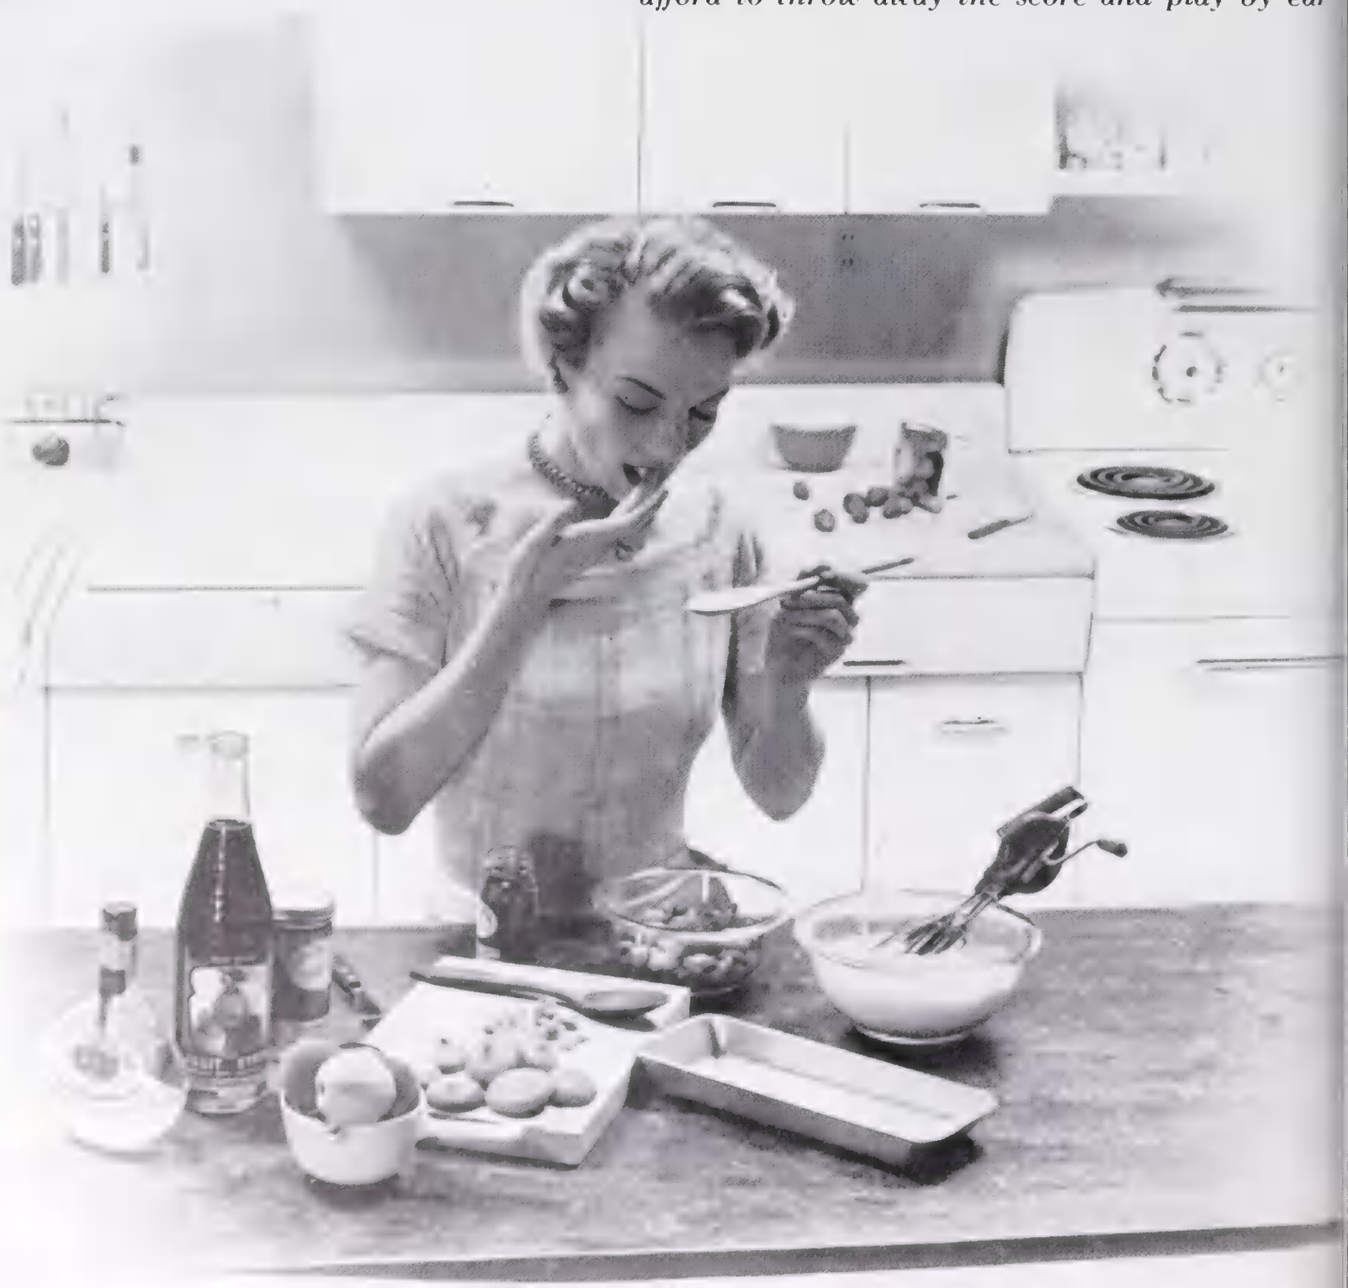
But to the average home-style musician, this is reassurance that you can make all manner of music in a small living room without having to live in a clutter of equipment. Large-scale instruments never intrude on this room's snug comfort, but take a visual back seat in imaginative built-ins. Mr. Montgomery himself designed the pleasantly provincial furniture—undoubtedly why Miss Shore can sing with conviction "It's So Nice to Have a Man Around the House."



Recording machine, players, and album shelves are built into tawny pine cupboards lined with calico wallpaper. Open or shut (opposite), built-ins are visually in tune with the provincial quality of this restful little room.

When you see the Montgomerys' placid music room, you'd never guess you were looking at a working sound studio, so unobtrusive are its music-making devices. The trick that made room for a grand piano in such small space was the right-angle placement of sectional loveseats. The closer to the walls you keep the seating, the more free floor space you can create.

GRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER



Plan shows how little space is actually required to contain enough technical equipment for Miss Shore to make professional recordings in her own music room—an idea adaptable to radio, TV, home recorders, et al. in any small living room. Left, the equipment in hiding.

HOW TO COOK BY EAR

Cooks and musicians have much in common. Once they have mastered the basic principles of their art, they can often afford to throw away the score and play by ear

By Jean Harris

Cooks are like musicians. Some are creative artists; some are mere automatons. We all know the pianist who can't play after dinner because he didn't bring his music. Or the amateur who has learned to play by heart the accompaniment of a song in F major, but couldn't accompany the same song in E major if his very life depended on it. Are you that way about cooking? Would you be lost if a recipe called for flour and you had only cornstarch in the house? If so, you've probably looked with suspicion on the cook who can taste a new dish at Chambord or Trader Vic's and duplicate it at home the next day. (She swears she never saw the recipe.) At the very least, you regard her talents as a mystery—just as some people are mystified by the pianist who can play a fully harmonized arrangement of any melody you might hum, whether he had ever heard it before or not.

But there is no great mystery about either of these abilities. Much of our dependence on both musical notation and cooking recipes comes because educators had a habit of treating music and cookery as if they were merely interpretative arts. Much musical education has been directed toward making the soloist, rather than the composer. The hands of the cook have been trained, but not her mind.

Nevertheless, creative talents in both arts can be cultivated. A musician has to train his ear. He has to listen to and record innumerable compositions to develop his abilities to recognize intervals and chords. He studies the principles of harmonizing melodies, of transposing and modulating from key to key. It is this sensitivity and knowledge that enables him to play by ear, to compose, to improvise.

By following the same pattern you can learn to cook by ear—to cook creatively instead of by rote. The first step is to train your palate—to develop your powers of taste-recognition by getting new food experiences. Try new dishes, new flavors, new foods, new combinations of old foods.

Most people lack this sensitivity to tastes because we have been conditioned to feel that there is something slightly discreditable about liking food. "The pleasures of the table" have been held to interfere with the development of a moral sense. Love of fine living has been associated with corruption and tyranny, and frowned upon as selfish and degrading.

Sensitivity to sound, on the other hand, and love of music have been considered noble and praiseworthy. But, actually, there is no such thing as a hierarchy of the senses. Taste experiences in themselves are neither "higher" nor "lower" than hearing experiences. Our moral character is no more adversely affected by meals composed entirely of cream puffs than it would be by a steady diet of Strauss waltzes. Each is good in its own place and should be part of everyone's experience. Music and food, hearing and taste are both keys which open up rich fields of knowledge and enjoyment. Artists know this. And they have always loved good food.

So try to become as sensitive to taste as the musician is to sound intervals. Become so familiar with various flavors that you can detect them anywhere. Also be as familiar with flavors in combination. Get acquainted with the famous loves of cookery—peaches with cream, roast beef with horse radish, apples with cheese. But too much of even these good things can get to be boring. If you cook every day, the constant struggle is to extend your range. The best way to do it is to take your cue from the musician who plays by ear.

"Cooking by ear" is no special God-given trick. It really comes with experience—aware experience. Your taste-training will make you aware that food gains by contrast as well as by harmony—contrast of flavors, of textures, and degrees of richness. Learn to appreciate the counterpoint of sweet played against sour, smooth against crisp, fat against lean. Aren't the teeth organs of sense just as much as the tongue? They should be given something to do, just as the pastry cook does when he sprinkles nuts on top of a cake, or as the Chinese do when they introduce crisp vegetables in a mixture in which everything else is cooked until it is soft.

But the art of cooking is more than mixing flavors and textures, just as the art of music is more than mixing sounds. Both arts are based on definite principles of structure which the artist must know before he can create his own variations. Cooked foods fall into different structure-categories, according to the foodstuffs which go into them, the way in which the materials are combined, and the method by which they are cooked. There are several well- (Continued on page 123)

Exploit the cooling power of the breezes

Let nothing interfere with the prevailing summer breezes. The air temperature can be in the 90's without discomfort to you if there is ample breeze. But the more humid the weather, the more urgent will be your need. Here's an attractive fence that shuts out prying eyes without obstructing the breezes because of the vertical arrangement of its louvers.

Take the chill from cold nights

Often in late summer, air temperature is theoretically high enough for comfort, but you chill quickly because your body loses heat by direct radiation to below-zero sky. Sky shade (right) stops heat loss. Canvas is stationary; screen rolls up during day.

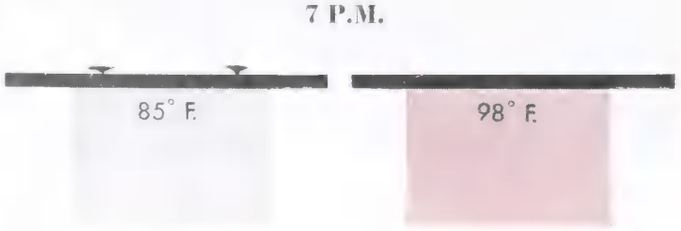
A parasol of water will keep your roof cool

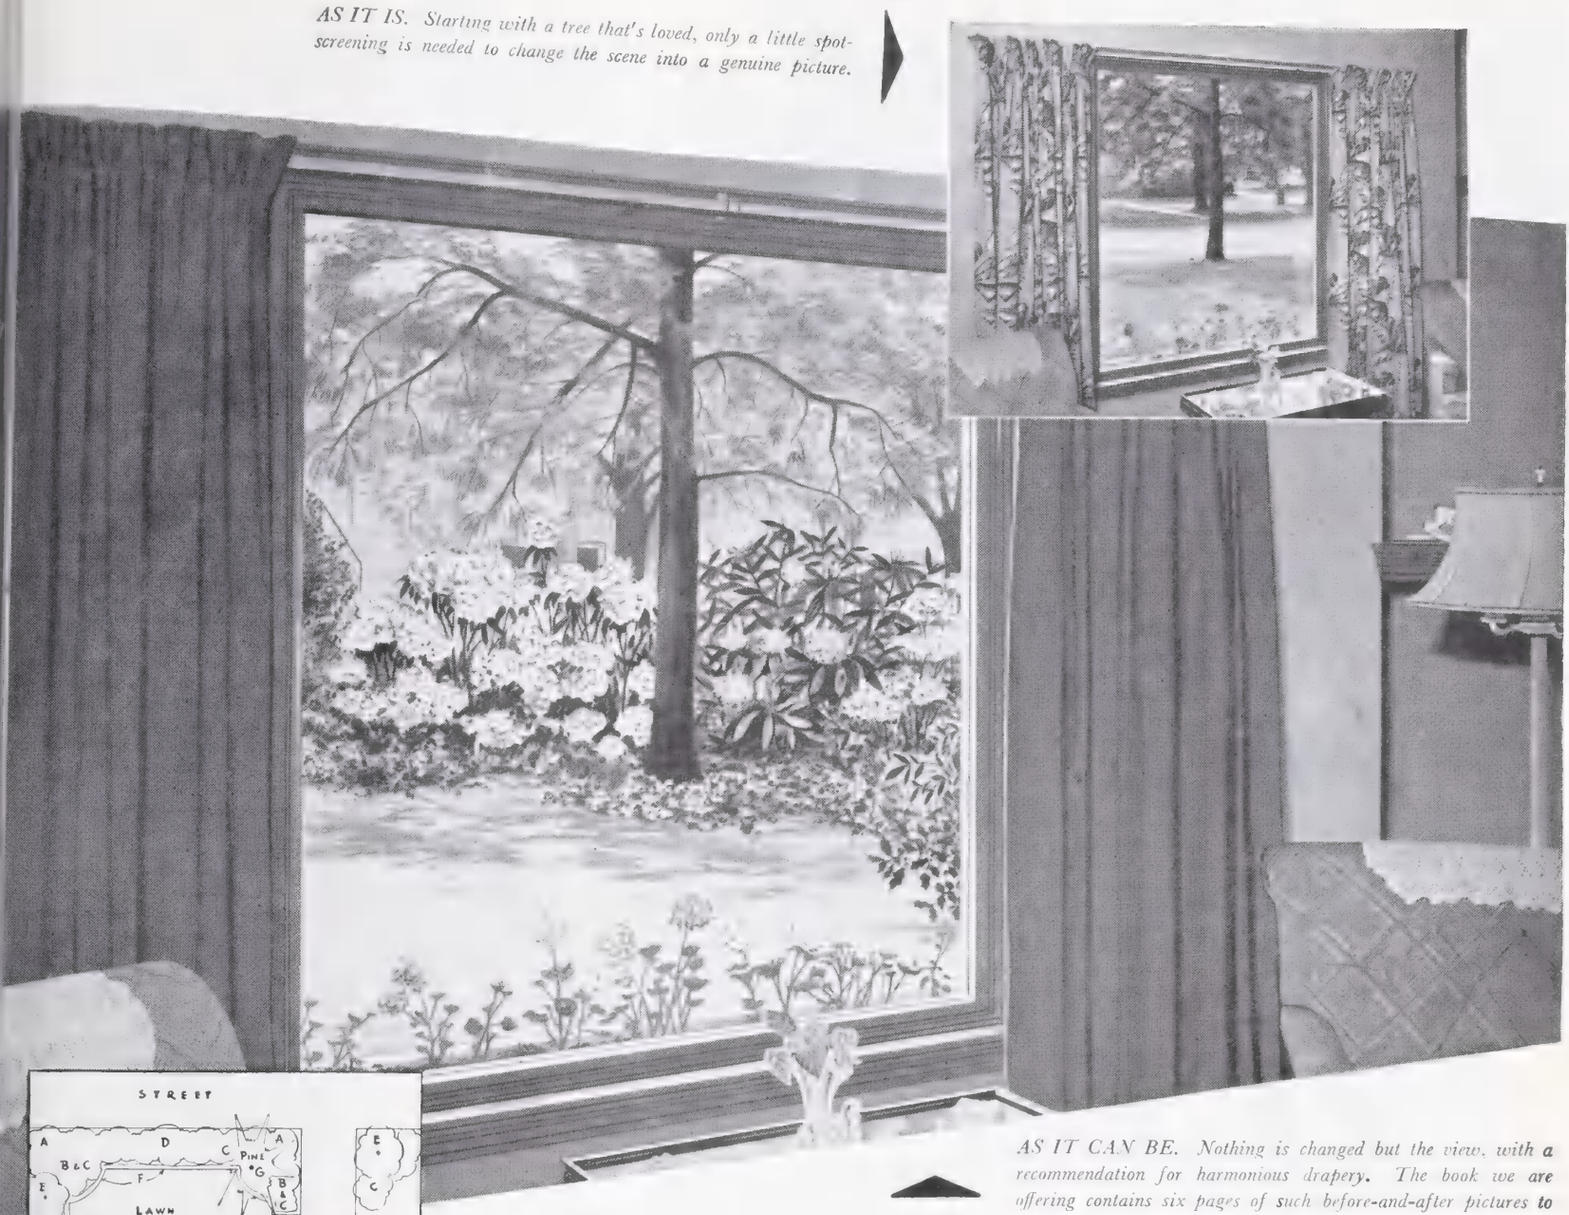
In Florida, where roofs get really hot, university scientists have proved the cooling power of the roof spray. Both you and your roof can benefit from their research



By James M. Fitch

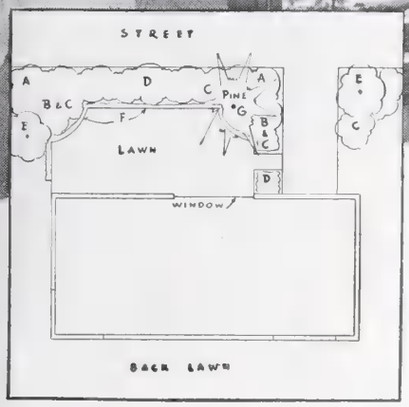
Sprinkled roof radiates down on you only one-sixth as much of sun's heat as a dry one. In hot weather this is a big item in comfort.

A sprinkled roof is cooler all the way through. Here you can see the top surface was 35 degrees cooler, the ceiling 14 degrees cooler.



At 7:00 P.M., three hours after sprinklers are turned off, water-cooled ceiling is still 13 degrees cooler than unsprayed ceiling.

It's the radiant heat of the sun, beating down on you through the roof over your head, that causes you as much discomfort these days as the temperature of the air around you. For summer comfort, therefore, try to keep your roof cool. One of the most effective ways to cool a roof is to sprinkle it with water. A roof that heats up to 150 degrees around noon on a summer's day can be quickly cooled down to 100 degrees with a few properly placed sprinklers and a surprisingly small amount of water. That's the main conclusion of a recent series of tests by the University of Florida's Engineering Department, according to staff researcher, G. E. Sutton.



The principle of the sprinkled roof is simplicity itself so it is equally adaptable to old or new houses, to flat or gabled roofs, to shingles or tar-and-gravel. It is based on the cooling effect of evaporation. It's like the perspiration you never see which cools your skin in hot weather. You never see it because it evaporates as fast as it appears. Just so, with a sprinkled roof, it is a thin film of continually evaporating water which does the cooling. Too much water on your roof is like too much sweat on your skin—a sign that evaporation is no longer working.

How does a sprinkled roof affect your comfort? Well, the most important fact is not that the upper surface is cooler, but that the ceilings below it are. The University of Florida tests showed that ceilings under a sprinkled roof are from 14 to 18 degrees cooler than those under a dry one. The water-cooled ceiling is not only cooler to the touch; it also radiates only one-sixth as much heat down onto the people below it (See top sketch). Finally the tests showed that the water-cooled ceiling is still (Continued on page 120)

The same would apply to any three artists and any three composers. Take Crosby. You'll find his "White Christmas" in almost any accumulation. But it would take a collection to turn up his "Creole Love Song," written by and performed with Duke Ellington. Likewise, Eugene Ormandy. No special glory goes to the man who can offer you Ormandy's Brahms, Richard Strauss, or Beethoven as diversion for a social evening. But show me the man who can produce the Dorsey Brothers Concert Orchestra playing, on two sides of an Okeh record (made in 1928), "Was It A Dream?" under the direction of "Dr. Eugene Ormandy" with Smith Ballew as vocalist, backed by a quartet consisting of Hal Kemp, Nye Mayhew, Saxey Dowell, and Skinnay Ennis, and I'd say he was a pretty fair specimen of a collector.

The fascination of record collecting, in short, does not consist—for most addicted to it—of turning up a terrific, but unknown, voice singing an unknown, but terrific, composition. Rather it consists of isolating, in time, a now well-known performer or group of performers—whether vocalist or other is beside the point—doing well something both good and incongruous. That is, I admit, expecting a lot of a record, but so many hundreds of thousands of them have been made in the last four or five decades that innumerable combinations of interest exist.

DO YOU think that Margaret Truman's current series of RCA Victor records is the first ever made by a president's daughter? Or the first by a Democratic president's daughter? Or even the first by a Democratic president's daughter named Margaret? Any collector worth his weight in cactus needles knows that Margaret Woodrow Wilson made eight sides for Columbia between 1914 and 1918, ranging from Higgins' "My Lovely Celia" to two versions of Thayer's "My Laddie" (one with piano, the other with orchestra).

It is this kind of enticing improbability, whether expressed in music or speech, hot rhythm, or chiseled polyphony, which has prompted the establishment of dozens of businesses in this country, England, France, and the Scandinavian countries (to mention only those I know about), the writing of many books and the publishing of numerous periodicals devoted to out-of-print, hard-to-get, "connoisseur's items," as they are variously described to collectors.

If the advent of slower-speed records has had an effect on the busy traffic in this market, it has primarily been to drive out the summer soldier and the fair-weather friend, leaving to the experienced campaigners the task of running down such prizes as Marian Anderson's black-label records for Victor at the end of the acoustic era, nearly ten years before the beginning of her Red Seal career.

THE wise collector (a plain contradiction in terms, since no really wise man would fall into the endless paths of this labyrinth) is the relatively wise collector who stakes out an area for himself and works over it as closely as he can. My private fancies are the lieder singing of Heinrich Schlusnus, the clarinet playing of Benny Goodman, and the songs of George Gershwin. I have dozens of the first, a hundred, probably, of the second, and close to two hundred of the third, after 15 years of systematic endeavor. I don't expect ever to reach the point when I have completed a file of any of them. But if I tried as well to amass the whole recorded dossier of John McCormack, Earl Hines, and Jerome Kern. I'd be confessing, merely, to delusions of grandeur.

I know, for example, of a collector who has 183 items by John McCormack. It would probably take him days to go through them from beginning to end, but he is still unhappy for lack of McCormack's "Salut demeure" from Faust and the "Air de Fleur" from Carmen. If he ever hears there is an unreleased disc of McCormack singing a fragment of Tristan, he will surely cry, with Sherlock Holmes, "Come, Watson, come. The game is afoot."

For another species of specialist I may cite the acquaintance with a gay fancy for musical comedy. Certainly you know Irving Berlin's "Not for All the Rice in China," but when did you last hear Clifton Webb sing it, as he did for a Victor record when As Thousands Cheer was current? Likewise, Libby Holman on "Moanin' Low" and "

ay Be Wrong But I Think You're onderful"? Fred Astaire singing d dancing "S'Wonderful" with orge Gershwin at the piano and se-cracking as he plays? Gerde Lawrence doing "Someone Watch Over Me" as she did in , Kay? Gloria Swanson singing ove, Your Magic Spell Is Everyere"? Crumit and Sanderson their "Tangerine" days? Ruph Valentino and Ramon Narro when they were singers as ll as screen stars, etc.?

For the beginning collector toy, such matters may be well out range, unless he is able to buy m at premium prices of $25 to 0 per copy. That practice, however, is not countenanced by your e devotee, who would part with ch a sum only to round out a ries of discs he has acquired at re conventional prices by rumaging through the stocks of used ord dealers, remainder counters, lvation Army depots, etc. But u can start today on such a proct as Walter Huston's "September Song" (the original one of the rly Forties, not the second version made much more recently), or llecting the tenor voice of Allan nes both as it sounds in "Donkey renade" and in the recording of ch's St. Matthew Passion which made with the St. Bartholoew's Church Choir (Victor album 8), long before he went to Hollyood, or Aksel Schiøtz singing Night and Day" and "Trees" in e same impeccable English that akes his version of "Every Valy" from Handel's Messiah such a y to the listener.

HE pleasures suggested above are subject to endless variation, finement, and improvement, with l privileged to indulge their pernality traits. A very attractive tegory I have never been able to rsue actively concerns experices available only on records. ch would be Serge Koussevitzky aying double bass or Fritz Kreisr as pianist (the latter would ve to be a dubbing of a piano ll, for I do not believe Kreisler er made a commercial piano rerding). Then, too, there would Pinza singing Leporello's air om Don Giovanni (he always layed the Don, of course), or, for at matter, Pinza singing "Bali ai" from South Pacific; Jennie ourel singing both mezzo and sorano parts in the "Barcarolle" om Offenbach's Tales of Hoffann, or Heifetz playing both parts f the other Bach's Concerto in D Minor; Samuel Barber as his own ocalist in composer Samuel Barber's setting of Matthew Arnold's "Dover Beach"; Conchita Supervia, the legendary Spanish mezzo of Carmen fame singing excerpts from Der Rosenkavalier and Hansel und Gretel; Rudolf Friml as piano accompanist to violinist Jan Kubelik; and Oscar Levant as piano accompanist to saxophonist Rudy Wiedoeft (circa 1927); James Melton as a member of the Revelers' vocal quartet; or the ineffable art of the indescribable Florence Foster Jenkins, whose enthusiastic ineptitude lives on because she was really so bad that she was funny.

CAN such an enthusiasm be profitable as well as amusing and instructive? Perhaps to a degree, but if you build a collection to enjoy it, obviously you are going to play the records once in a while, which will diminish their value for those who are mere label fanciers.

More recently, the trend to reissues has given great stimulus to the collecting instinct, by making possible a beginning point from which to work. At the same time, it has cut more than a few dollars from the auctionable worth of what was formerly considered a fair price, say, for Canteloube's Songs of the Auvergne as sung by Madeleine Gray, or Schönberg's Gurre-Lieder. Also, the appearance of numerous items in LP collections has made such speculative investment a little more of a speculation than an investment. There remains, however, the old guard to whom such terms as "mint condition" and "pre-dog Victor" (meaning a Victor record of such antiquity that the famous trademark of Francis Barraud was not yet in use) are words to conjure with, especially when the time comes to talk price. On the whole, modern reissues have tended to drive down inflated values.

Strange, the triumphs that a lucky record find can offer you! I remember when I asked Benny Goodman when he had recorded "Sweet Sue" with Ted Lewis and his band. "Never," he said firmly. When I put the scarred silver-labeled Columbia record I had found in a Sixth Avenue bargain counter on the machine with Lewis's syrupy voice drooling through the first chorus, he shook his head in disbelief. Then, suddenly, the air was cleared, as a clarinet cut through the mess, angular, clean, exciting. "That's me, all right," said Goodman in incredulous wonder. He had forgotten ever having made it, but the record couldn't be denied. See what I mean about collecting?

Herbert—Selections of Victor Herbert music
Gershwin—Selections of George Gershwin music

The reasons I have selected these particular compositions as being an essential part of every music library are, first, because of their simple, predominantly melodic beauty, and second, because, for the most part, they are representative not only of the general character of each composer's style, but also of the locale from which each originated. Thus, they provide a good cross section of musical color based on various nationalities, customs, traditions, philosophies.

WHEN YOUR MIND STARTS TO WANDER

several years. Then, all of a sudden, every pianist of any importance had the happy inspiration to put the "Symphonic Varations" on his or her programs with orchestra. I don't recall just how many performances of the piece I heard during those months. I do recall that by the end of that season César Franck and I were not on speaking terms. It took me years to regain my liking for that piece of music.

You know the probable fate of most current popular songs. They are sung, and yodeled, and moaned, and yelled, and specially-arrangemented over hundreds of radios, in thousands of night clubs, day in and day out, for an average of three months. Then the public revolts. In a little while it is as though they had never been. It is commonly assumed that such a fate could never overtake a symphony or suite or concerto. That assumption is false, I believe. It is true that we derive a maximum of pleasure from hearing a work that is familiar. But not too familiar. There is a danger point at which a given piece of music ceases to reveal any fresh charms. The fact that a work is immortal does not necessarily imply that you want to hear it three times a day. Perhaps that is why your mind wandered.

What to do about it? A friend of mine has devised a very simple way of doing something about it. He has his own two-year plan. Whenever he finds himself being slightly bored with a given piece—let us say Dvorak's "From the New World" Symphony—he simply avoids it. If he hears it over the radio he tunes in another station. If it is programmed for the first half of a concert, he arrives late. If for the second half, he leaves early. At the end of two years he goes back to it with renewed surprise and delight.

IF THE music that set your mind to wool-gathering happened to be something new, a work totally unfamiliar to you, then the reason for said wool-gathering is a simple one. A work of symphonic proportions does not necessarily yield up its secrets at one hearing. Its charms are not likely to be immediately obvious. To grasp its structure and meaning demands close, concentrated attention. You have to work much harder at listening to new music than at hearing an old friend. When the eyes begin to glaze, and the attention to weaken, don't be discouraged with yourself. Your mind is simply tired. Turn the piece off, or go back to your reverie. When the opportunity arises, try listening again. This time you'll get much further. By the fourth hearing, the old mind will probably be running on all eight, from prelude to finale.

Which of these styles would you choose for YOUR home?

If you like modern with a touch of romance, this Curtis bow window is made for you. It has three fixed casement sash in the center and two Curtis casements which open at the side. These wood casements are very special because they are Curtis Silentites—so weathertight they can clip many dollars off your fuel bills.

If your taste runs to the dramatic, you can make all nature a background for living with this big Curtis picture window. The two flanking Silentite double-hung windows have remarkable "floating" weatherstrips that provide positive protection from weather—and a Silentite always operates easily.

For a sunshiny room—here's an excellent window choice—this Curtis bay, made up of large Silentite windows with divided lights. Bays in several sizes are economically made with Curtis Silentite windows.

Whatever your taste, there's a Curtis window to fit—because the Curtis Silentite window family offers such a wide variety of styles and sizes. Remember, Silentite windows are wood windows to give you extra protection from heat and cold, and greater fuel saving. Mail coupon for helpful window book.

• The whole family plays the recorder in the home of Suzanne Bloch, founder of the American Recorder Society. Her husband, Paul Smith, a mathematics professor at Columbia University, often joins her in her public concerts.

"COME—THE RECORDERS"

Hamlet say to Guildenstern: "Govern these ventages with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music." A moment later Hamlet adds, "There is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ."

The recorder had its devotees on the Continent, too. And the greatest composers of the era wrote a wealth of lovely music for it. In the days of Bach and Handel it had a place in the orchestra at times. These towering geniuses, as well as many other composers, wrote for solo recorder and for ensemble of recorders. Professional musicians played the recorder—Bach required it in his Second and Fourth Brandenburg Concertos—but most of all, it was the happy hunting ground of the amateur.

In time the vogue of the recorder declined. We need not go into all the reasons. New instruments came into fashion: new styles of musical expression were adopted: the amateur musician of modest attainments became rarer perhaps. About 30 years ago a revival of the wonderful, neglected music of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century took place, and with it the recorder began to stage a comeback that keeps growing in momentum.

You can see why by examining the recorder more closely. It belongs to the flute family. The recorder, in fact, was the precursor of the modern transverse flute which you can play by blowing out of the side. The modern flute, however, is difficult to master, whereas the recorder is simplicity itse is a narrow tube with a mouth at the end. Along its length t are eight holes—three for the dle fingers of each hand, plus for the thumb of one hand and for the little finger of the other you need to do, as Shakespear served, is cover and uncover holes or "ventages" with the fi and blow into the mouthpiec takes no more than a few hou learn a simple tune on the reco

THE renascence of the reco was like manna from heave the musical educators. Some y ago they realized that with thi strument they could intro youngsters, even children in earliest grades of elementary sc to the delights of playing musi themselves. A few progre schools began to acquire recor as standard teaching equipm like readers and arithmetic bo Others followed, and the trend on. One store in New York w had sold half a dozen recorder antiquarians in a year sudd discovered it had an immense mand to cope with, and in tw months it sold 4,000 instrume

When the recorders had been exclusive concern of a handfu people, they had been made abr but the new interest moved A ican manufacturers to make t in quantity. This was fortunate it was impossible to import corders during the war and A ican instrument-makers were t in a position to satisfy the dem

Public schools, music schools, vate music teachers, and sum- r camps have made the recorder egular activity. Adults have re- covered it as an innocent and isfying source of musical fun. ok into it yourself. Ask a music cher you know (or the leading sic store in your town) about recorder. You don't need much truction or many formal lessons learn it.

One of the agreeable things about recorder is that it is a sociable trument. It comes in various es and ranges. In the days of akespeare, Milton, and Pepys, ople owned a chest of recorders, proud musical amateur would e recorders of three, four, or e sizes, and when his friends lied around for an afternoon or ning of music, recorders and ts were distributed, and the yers had the pleasure of joining performances that sounded full l complete.

Today, the recorder is fairly well ndardized in four sizes—sopra- alto, tenor, and bass. It is wise start a young child with a plastic rano recorder, since this is the apest. Once the youngster has oved that he is enjoying the trument, perhaps a wooden one, ich is a little more expensive, be obtained. Older brothers l sisters and mother and father, well as cousins, uncles and nts, not to speak of grandparents, be enticed into trying their fingers and breaths on the instrument. Presently family groups will have their own trios, quartets, and quintets, even chamber orchestras.

What about music? Don't let that worry you. Ever since the new popularity of the recorder began, the publishers have been issuing new editions of old music written for the instrument. A glance at a recent catalog shows new publications of works by Mozart, Handel, Lassus, Purcell, Corelli, as well as composers whose names are all but forgotten but whose music is as fresh as a light breeze through a field of new-mown hay.

TODAY'S recorder players make a goodly and devoted company. There is an American Recorder Society—founded in 1939 by Suzanne Bloch, daughter of the great composer, Ernest Bloch, and a gifted musician in her own right. This organization, which has regular meetings and concerts in New York, has members throughout the country. There are professional musicians who play the recorder at concerts. Miss Bloch always uses it at her performances of old music, and she has even prevailed on her husband, Paul Smith, a mathematics professor at Columbia University, to learn it and to join her in her concerts. Expert players have made recordings of old masterpieces.

Best of all, there is the joy—for your children and for yourself—of sharing in the making of music, and there are not many greater pleasures or more binding and warming ties for the family.

They find zart dull, to name but one, and refore shy away from all clas- al music. Just who is missing the st is a question—the chamber sic devotee who looks down his se at Gershwin, or the jazz en- siast who finds Brahms pretty avy going.

I, for one, am trying in my own way to break down the barriers between so-called "serious" music and "popular" music. As a matter of fact, I object to both these terms. Some "serious" music is not very serious, and virtually all really good music has proved to be "popular," if not at first, then in the long run. The trouble often lies in the presentation. If a Mozart opera is performed in such a stuffy way that it loses all hope of becoming popular, the fault is neither with the listener nor with Mozart. But that's another story we won't go into now.

As conductor of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra and the Esplanade Concerts for many years, I have directed my efforts mainly to music that the majority of people could enjoy. I have consistently tried to present music of wide entertainment value, but always with the thought in mind that the music must be tops of its kind regardless of the category to which it belongs. As our concerts during the "Pops" season take place seven nights a week, each program is necessarily and purposely planned to appeal to the widest musical taste each evening. I have tried to make certain that no one shuns our concerts because the programs are either too classical or too popular.

While I have never set out consciously to be an educator, my task of making up varied, well-balanced programs seems to have done a great deal toward overcoming narrow listening habits. More than a few persons who now attend the regular subscription series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra admit that they were first exposed to more "serious" music at our "Pops" concerts. Conversely, a good number of "aesthetes" have discovered, finally, that much musical pleasure may be derived from listening to a lilting Strauss waltz, or to a real snappy Broadway-hit medley if it was well played.

The important thing, it seems to me, is to be honest with yourself. Why not give every type of music a chance to get under your musical skin? Many persons listen with prejudice. Meet the music on its own level and you will greatly enlarge your sphere of listening pleasure.

EVERY music lover should have the courage to accept or reject music solely on how well it realizes its purpose. Though it may sound like heresy, it is nevertheless a fact that not everything the great classic masters wrote is first-class music. These men were human, just as you and I, and everyone, no matter how great, has his lesser moments. Consequently, these composers sometimes issued music far below their own standards. We forgive and forget the lapses of the great masters, and we measure Beethoven by the great symphonies, for example, forgetting the works that have not stood the test of time. On the other hand, much excellent music has been produced by little-known composers, and just because their names are not ranked with the greatest, their music is rarely heard.

Another type of musical snob is the one who raises eyebrows at certain compositions for no other reason than that they are so frequently performed. This is the person who sneers at classic favorites—works like Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, or Tchaikovsky's last three symphonies. I maintain that such well-loved music is so frequently played because it is basically good and fine. After all, there are always some people in every audience who are hearing these so-called "hackneyed" masterpieces for the first time. Would that I could have the thrill all over again!

In general, "typing" music and composers does not seem to be such a good idea. Great poets have often written short verse of light and fanciful nature. Some of our most famous artists have not considered it beneath them to draw caricatures and cartoons. Many of the best authors have written short stories of nothing more than "entertainment value." Why apply different standards to music?

LET'S learn a lesson from some of our great musicians. Most of the distinguished composers, conductors, and performers I have met very obviously enjoy all types of music, always providing that it is tops in its own category. The famous French composer, Maurice Ravel, for example, on his concert tours in this country found his principal relaxation in hearing "Le Jazz Americain" played in its native habitat. Some of the best-known night clubs on Broadway saw the slim and aristocratic-looking composer listening with every sign of enjoyment and absorption to the latest hit tune of the day or to a clever arrangement of some standard jazz favorite.

A classic example of complete lack of musical snobbishness is Arturo Toscanini, who is nothing if not particular about everything pertaining to music. Yet he has not considered it beneath his musical dignity to include in his concert programs compositions like "The Blue Danube" by Strauss, Gershwin's "An American in Paris," Grofé's "Grand Canyon Suite," and "The Skaters Waltz" by Waldteufel.

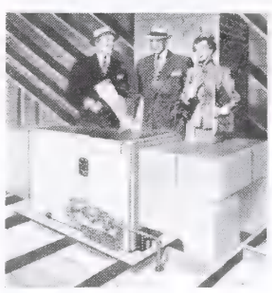
hafing-dish cookery has so many inimitable virtues that it's difficult to understand why for a while it became something of a lost or known art, especially so far as the younger generation was concerned. But television, for one thing, has brought about a renaissance of boom proportions. The wealth of recipes available until now has contributed much to the chafing dish's erstwhile twilight. It's long been an everyday matter around here to receive many an SOS from the enlightened, puzzled brides and others who've become the puzzled recipients of a chafing dish.

The inspired guidance and recipe and menu repertoires found in The Chafing Dish Cookbook, by John and Marie Roberson, puts a new complexion on the situation. A primer of such informative scope could in itself inaugurate a revival of the art. Each of the 200 recipes is accompanied by a fitting menu. Most important of all, below the recipe's ingredient tabulation, you find three procedure "recipes": The first, "Behind the Scenes," provides step-by-step guidance on the preparatory mixing of the ingredients which is best done in private. "Before Your Guests" tells you how to proceed when the chafing dish is ready to receive the ingredients of the recipe to be whipped into a delectable masterpiece. Finally, "Tray-Maid" enumerates the basic and pre-prepared wherewithal with which you load the tray when you transfer the chafing dish to the cooking scene. Thus, only the deft chef-like flourishes are publicly displayed, and without worry or mess. Even those who were long since initiated into chafing-dish cookery can learn a thing or two from this unique cookbook. And everyone will marvel at the scope of the art when it's given a chance to fully demonstrate its versatility. As you'll find from the wondrous recipe collection, chafing-dish cookery runs the gamut of prepared foods, from appetizers to desserts, for meals and snacks around the clock. $3. Epicure's Mart, 33 East Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Connecticut.

I've been doing some further sleuthing on the salad-dressing front. I didn't realize how diverse the current offerings are and what unusual ones exist. For instance, let's take a look at a quartet of salad dressings which I encountered: namely, Cocktail Delight avocado dressing, a dill dressing by the same processors, their Roquefort dressing, and the Reeve's poppy-seed dressing. Nothing new about Roquefort dressing, you say. True, so far as its content of imported Roquefort is concerned, but not true of the manner in which it is incorporated. The dressing has the consistency of a thin boiled dressing, and the Roquefort has been made part and parcel of it—say, the way you'd use puréed avocado pulp in making an aspic salad. This unique procedure gives every drop of the dressing the full benefit of the Roquefort's pungent flavor and seems, too, to release more of it than the conventional method of crumbling Roquefort into a French-dressing base.



The avocado dressing has been handled in the same manner. Sherry wine is used to give the delicately-flavored dressing a fillip, but for my taste, I think it's not amiss to augment it with, say, a sprinkling of Spice Islands Beau Monde seasoning (that's my pet candidate for the assignment; its celery-like undertone is especially right), or a dash of Worcestershire sauce, onion juice or horse-radish to add a wee bit more verve.

The fact that there is such a thing as poppy-seed dressing on the horizon was a surprise in itself. I was surprised, too, to discover that though it tastes like an oil-base dressing, it contains no oil. Perhaps, the poppy seeds themselves contribute theirs. The seeds are present in the dressing. Seeds, vinegar, and a breath of sugar and spices mingle to give it a mellow tang that's especially fitting for fruit salads.

Dressing an asparagus salad is a use for which the dill dressing proved to have great merit. Its vinegary savor is perfect where you want a tart dressing. The flavor of the dill seems to stay in the background on first taste, yet you discover a moment later that it's far more dominant than you thought. Unlike the creamy consistency of the other three, the dill dressing is much like a French dressing. (Three 8-oz. bottles of the dill dressing cost $1.60; three of any of the other dressings, $2.50. Prices include postage.)

My other finds are three salad oils. The shining star of the group is a superfine walnut oil from France. French walnut oil has been absent from our shores since World War II, and those who know it will hail its return. It's considered by many to be the sovereign of salad oils. (I'm well aware that I walk on eggs in bringing up the matter.)

The second is an oil derived from avocados. It has a light body and a delicate, delightful flavor that leaves no doubt of its origin.

The third is pressed from apricot and peach kernels. It's heavy-bodied, rather pungent, and has a fruity undertone. (Walnut oil, $5 for the quart jug; pint bottle either of the other two, $2.75. A ppd.) Both dressings and oils avai able from C. Henderson's, 52 Ea 55th Street, New York, N. Y.

To accompany tastily such summe fare as cold cuts, sandwiches, ar salads, there are those little extra so rightly named "relishes" tha add their generous bit to eatin pleasure. The ones in point are super-quality Calpre trio: spice watermelon rind, canteloupe rin and a third made from the hone dew melon, itself. They're rich, extra-heavy syrup, delicate spiced. The rind or fruit, as th case may be, is especially firm an in large pieces. Try the honeyde variety, slivered, in molded lim salad. The syrups of the relishe provide a spicy sweetener for fru salads. Three of each, or assorte cost $2.25, from California Pr serves, 2 Park Ave., New York, N.

A find for iced-coffee-makin I came upon is a new, granular i stant coffee, guaranteed to cau a stir among iced-coffee drinker The wonder of it is that it di solves readily and completely i cold water. Add the ice, and that it! What could be more perfe for outings and trips? To me hold-out for conventional coffee- the authentic coffee taste of Hol day Coffee came as a revealing an pleasant surprise. The jar label i forms you that this characteristi and its solubility in cold wate stem from innovative low-temper ture processing. But what does matter how it's done? What coun in the final analysis is that it yiel a delicious brew, cold or hot.

When you come right down to it, the standards for light music are the same as for every kind. Only the musical snob would rather hear Debussy played by a half-good pianist than to hear a jazz orchestra play some dance tune to perfection. Like everything else, music has its quota of poseurs, and I have often suspected that much of the supercilious attitude to be found in many concert-goers is largely a matter of doing or saying what seems smart in one's ow set or the set one is striving crash.

As a final test, listen to the hac neyed "William Tell" Overture Rossini from start to finish. you find (in spite of "The Lon Ranger") that it is a perfect e ample of a well-constructed an stirring composition, and if yo have the courage to admit it, the you are assuredly not a music snob!

Up near Lenox, Massachusetts, here the Berkshire Music Festival already under way at Tangle- ood, you can put up at a French rovincial farm and still be within mile's pleasant walk of the big ings. The name of this unusual stelry is Music Inn and it's more less dedicated, during July and ugust, at any rate, to music and sister arts. When the Tangle- ood Festival ends on August 12, ed Shawn's dancers will still be ing strong at Jacob's Pillar and e Berkshire Playhouse continues dramatics in Stockbridge, both sily accessible. And from August to September 3, right on the remises, musicians, psychologists, nthropologists, sociologists, danc- s, and interested guests will t their heads together for a Jazz oundtable. But you don't have to ow B flat from a potted palm to joy the place. Nor must you par- cipate in the swimming, riding, oquet, badminton, golf, tennis, cycling, square dancing, or winter orts (should you go later on for snow week end). You can do thing but just loaf in the beau- ful Berkshires and nobody will ink you're a sissy. There's an in- resting Shaker community near that's worth a visit, and one of le endearing features of the man- gement is that they don't assume l guests will arrive in their own rs, so they make provisions to eet trains and busses and see at you get taken wherever you ant to go. Food is fresh, country- own, and good. Off-season rates, effect on August 12, stand you out $65 to $75 a week per person, merican plan. orth woods special

If you yearn to flex your muscles unspoiled great outdoors, the uetico-Superior region along Min- sota's Canadian border is very uch the sort of place for you. this tall timber country, deer, ar, and moose stalk the shores quiet little lakes, the aurora realis often streams so brilliant- ly across the sky that you can read inside your tent at night, and your own catch tastes all the better because of the day's fishing in clean, cool air and the nerve tonic of still water. To satisfy the Paul Bunyan instinct in you, the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad makes this area the goal of five-, eight-, and fifteen-day, all-expense, escorted trips from Chicago. On each, you travel by train to Ely, Minnesota, and by bus and motor launch to Basswood Lodge. Here a guide with camping equipment, canoes, and know-how takes over, and, without diminishing your sense of red-blooded achievement, sees you easily through an adventure which might otherwise require considerable to-do about personnel and equipment. All this at prices as low as $96.91 for five days, $138.36 for eight, or $255.01 for fifteen, coach rates. Check with the railroad, or your travel agent.

The Cape

Cape Cod, whose many resorts are customarily booked full during summer itself, is one of many places it is an advantage to visit either early or late. There are those, in fact, who feel deeply that for aesthetic as well as financial and convenience reasons, there is no time like early fall to visit the Cape. Then the crowds are gone, but the Gulf Stream still warms the endless sandy beaches, an old-gold sun lights the little gardens, softens the austerity of old gray shingled houses, and reddens the cranberry bogs. Now is the quiet sunlit time to search out the golden eagles marking old sea captains' homes, to track down history, tradition, legend, ghosts, and to shop for bayberry candles and antiques. Although some of the larger and more fashionable hotels on the Cape close with Labor Day, most accommodations stay open until mid-October or all year, often with special fall rates starting some time in September. A talk with your travel agent will reveal that such all-expense tours as Cook's, six days by motor coach, $145 from New York, or the special services of the New Haven Railroad, continue into September or later. And even if you've been there before, recent changes like the three new units added this summer by the Colony at Wellfleet, the reopening of High Brewster, at Brewster, and the steady progress of the new

So many road-map wrestlers could be driving serenely on their way along the best highways, forewarned of detours and passing up none of the famous landmarks en route if they had only asked one of the oil companies to plan their route. The motor travel experts of the Esso Touring Service, for instance, would think nothing of plotting out a custom-made route for you on your next motor journey, tipping you off on current road conditions, ferry schedules, points of interest, and anything else they think might make your motoring happier—all delightfully for free. You can state your case at any of their three central offices—15 West 51st Street, New York; 261 Constitution Avenue N.W., Washington, D. C.; 1009 St. Charles Avenue, New Orleans, La.—and come away with a marked map in your pocket, or write for the information on the "Route Request" card you can get from your Esso dealer. You might also like to know, in case you're taking the car abroad, that Esso also has road maps for Canada, Mexico, and most of Western Europe, South and Central America, and the Caribbean countries.

And that reminds us that ECA (Economic Cooperation Administration) has put out a booklet that answers your questions if you've been wondering how you arrange to hire a car in Europe and take yourself places. "Drive Yourself in ERP Countries" gives you the story on procedures, prices, and rental agencies in Austria, France, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United Kingdom, then adds two pages of those eminently sensible International Road Signs, and a glossary of automobile terms in seven languages. No cliffs to climb

So you're not one for scrambling up ladders, picking your way along high ledges! Then the best spot for you to investigate that phenomenon of American background known as the cliff dwelling is at Mesa Verde National Park, in the southwest corner of Colorado. Though you must deviate from main transcontinental routes to get there, the approach highways both from Gallup, New Mexico, and Grand Junction, Colorado, are rich with technicolor scenery. And though, among the numerous primitive dwellings that the National Park Service has readied for investigation at Mesa Verde, you can find every opportunity to clamber, climb, and otherwise exhibit your steady nerves, your good heart, and your adventurer's soul, you really don't have to. Cliff Palace, one of the largest and most famous anywhere, is available by car plus a short walk and merely a few rocky staircases.

The Park's most thoroughly restored Spruce Tree House is only a pleasant stroll from Park headquarters. And even if you don't visit a single cliff dwelling first hand, the Park Museum will give you all vicariously, from basket-maker to cliff dweller, in an exceptionally fine collection of handcrafts and beautifully executed dioramas. If you arrive disinclined to see or think about cliff dwellings at all, you'll still like the Mesa. You'll like its pine-green-against-tawny-rock color scheme, especially with the mauve desert and distant powder-blue mountain cones beyond. You'll like the sweet, surprising coolness even a tiny juniper provides when the midday sun seems hot, the fresh sparkle in the air after each afternoon's brief shower. You'll enjoy the folksy informality of Spruce Tree Lodge which offers cabins all year—cabins, tents, and meals until October 15. However, since this is the Park's one and only, it is no place to approach without reservations. As you sit in the rocky, firelit amphitheatre at night listening to the Ranger's lecture, or watching the Navajo dancers, you'll very quickly find that you, too, are fascinated by one of the strangest stories of human achievement and human tragedy this country has ever had to tell.

various South America!

ular goings-on in travel concern
South America, so you will be well repaid, should this be your next goal, for investigating all the possibilities before you sign up. Between a general easing of tourist entry requirements and favorable exchange rates almost everywhere, plus a prodigious expansion in transportation and accommodations, you should, perhaps, dismiss whatever preconception you may have about South American travel. Just start anew, determining exactly what you want to see and do, and how much time and money you can spend for it, counting on your travel agent for arrangements custom-tailored to fit.

If you can cheerfully skip ruins, Indians, jungle, and the gaucho for the sheer joy of shipboard life, the familiar cruise, with just a taste of the principal port cities thrown in, is indubitably for you. But even so, you must choose between the brief cruise (twelve days or so) visiting ports in the Caribbean and in Venezuela, Colombia, British Guiana; the longer cruise (up to 47 days) down the east coast; and less frequent and less familiar west-coast cruises.

But if your joy in cruising is tempered by a desire for high Andes scenery, then you may prefer a tour already set up, or individually planned, to combine ship, plane, motor coach, and railroad for a swing around and through the continent. And if it's South America you're after, and getting there is but a means to an end, you may prefer one of the rapidly expanding air services which not only whisk you down in luxury overnight, but just a little more slowly and less luxuriously at a price. These flights so circle, crisscross, and penetrate the continent that they are creating new travel possibilities at a most exciting rate. Combine them with local sight-seeing in places that used to be considered out of the way, and you can whip yourself up some intriguing junkets.

Just one example: Angel Falls, Venezuela's pride and beyond question the world's highest, hitherto reserved for only the most intrepid, is now yours on a package tour!

a hundred miles or so north of Toronto. Muskoka has water, four large and many smaller lakes. It is hilly, forested, and just high enough and north enough so you'll want to take—or buy there—a cashmere sweater and a fluffy pastel coat. It has a water transportation system you can use either for sight-seeing or effortless progress from lake to lake. And, snuggling into the meandering shores, or on tiny islands, are innumerable resorts, which offer every facility for the less strenuous type of outdoor enjoyment. These attract a clientele who come annually, from grandmother crocheting blissfully on the cool porch, to the latest baby play-penned on the lawn. Most thoroughly so, perhaps, is venerable Bigwin Inn, which takes you to its very own island on its very own launch, and makes you feel at home in a vast and elaborate establishment. There's a huge central lodge, rooms in separate lodges or individual cottages, dining and dancing pavilions, a tea room for in-between meals, a sun deck for alfresco lunching. There's also a golf course, complete swimming and boating facilities, a special beach and playroom for children—with connecting walks sheltered against sudden showers. Swank is no part of the scene, but there's a tendency to dress for dinner. Since Bigwin is popular, closes September 8, and gives you a lot for rates starting at $10 American Plan—currently $9 in American money—write ahead for reservations. Dates to remember

So rich a travel month is August that, wherever it takes you, you'll want to plot your way with regard for the special events that can add so much to your understanding, your enjoyment, and your file of "I-have-been-there" films. Here are but a few:

In France, the two-thousand-years-young birthday party of Paris expands during August to include ceremonies at Versailles, Fontainebleau, Compiègne, and other fabulous chateaux near the city.

In Denmark, in the sound near Hamlet's Elsinore, for instance, t tuna season opens August 1, la through September, with the r ords indicating that you, too, n be in for up to 800 pounds fighting fish.

At San Juan, Puerto Rico, the v first Caribbean Festival, August 12, will present Calypso sing from Trinidad, voodoo dancers fr Haiti, and similar exotic specialt from sixteen Caribbean islan and Venezuela, who are all parti pating in typical, colorfully exc goings-on.

At Santa Barbara, California, annual Old Spanish Days Fie August 8-11, will again fill streets with dancing, with current generation of old Span families wearing treasured h loom mantillas, and with the m nificent Fiesta Parade, featur the golden Palomino and proba the world's richest collection silver saddle trappings.

In the Austrian Tyrol, August 22, is Folk Lore Week, as gay a colorful a spectacle as you co hope for, with dancers, singers a such not only from all Austria, all Europe.

In Scotland, even though you w ly have tickets in hand for the E burgh Festival, August 19-Sept ber 6, do save time for the c gatherings and Highland games Edinburgh and elsewhere bef during, and after. Leave time fo least a few of the lovely gard near by, many of which, with homes that go with them, will open during the Festival on spe motor coach tours.

As for conversation at dinner, there are three subjects almost inevitable—two safe and the third fraught with danger. The safe ones have already been indicated—food and travel. The reason that they are safe is that the guest, if he is at all articulate (and most musicians, being performers by nature, are), will talk with pleasure on either subject—by itself or in combination.

THE dangerous and inevitable subject is, of course, music. And the most dangerous aspect of that subject is the one most likely to come up—the quality of performances by other musicians in the same field as your guest. For every pianist, however modestly he may speak, considers himself at least potentially a rival to Horowitz and Rubinstein, every fiddler a rival to Heifetz and Szigeti. This self-estimate may be entirely justified, and your guest may be even extremely generous in his estimate of his colleagues. Yet he feels intensely about details, and he is likely to be irritated by the opinions of someone less an expert than he is himself.

It would seem safe, therefore, to try discussing singers with instrumentalists and instrumentalists with singers. Safe, perhaps, but difficult. A performer, like anyone else, likes to discuss shop—his own shop. If you are discussing business with a manufacturer of shoes, you are not likely to be able to keep the subject to making brassières.

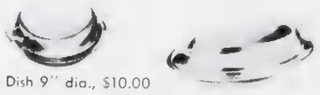
And so my advice, in the interests of avoiding an edgy evening, is to save your admiration for those in the same field but not in direct competition. That still gives you three sizable classifications: those who are dead, those who are retired, and the local, untried talent. With a fiddler, it is pretty safe to admire Ysaye or Kreisler, unless your guest is past sixty. With a soprano you may admire Sembrich or even Mary Garden. Toscanini is in a class by himself. No other conductor can consider him a rival. Even so, one young conductor I know became uncomfortably argumentative when I suggested that the old maestro did well with the particular composer whom my friend has made his own specialty. A touchy race, musicians—particularly about music.

THE same general advice holds for music to be played after dinner—that is, if you have a good phonograph and a good collection of records. Try to avoid recordings by artists whom your guest may feel to be competitors. If he is a violinist, he will not be much interested in piano or orchestral recordings. Try, therefore, to have available some older recordings by men who are not in direct competition with your guest. Such recordings by the great artists of the past have recently been reissued.

Or, failing such recordings, you can safely try other non-competitive music likely to interest your guest, such as the extraordinary singing of the Aztec soprano Ima Sumac, with her four-octave range and a repertoire no one else uses. You can, for a while, even play jazz. It is fashionable nowadays for all serious musicians to express a serious interest in jazz, and with some the interest is genuine. I would suggest, however, that in this field you use the more adventuresome type of musician like Lennie Tristano or Stan Kenton rather than such standard workers as Kay Kyser or Guy Lombardo.



Finally comes what is, or can be, the most troublesome question of all: whether to ask or not to ask your guest to perform.

One may r Josef Hofmann's sarcastic rep a dinner invitation at a house w he knew he would be expecte perform: "Mr. Hofmann re that he will be unable to accep invitation to dine as he has just fered a slight cut on the tip of finger."

On the other hand, an artist feel offended if he is not as while your other guests may disappointed if he does not pla them.

THE simplest way out of th lemma is to make sure that piano is out of tune or in other way incapacitated for th casion. All your guests, inclu the musician, may be some disappointed, but a graceful ogy will cover any awkward and the question of whether o to ask will never seriously ari

But if you do wish to take vantage of the artist's presen your home, be sure that the is in excellent shape, that no is sitting on the piano stool, that the path to the piano is cumbered. The one thi make sure of is that everyo quiet during the entire per ance. Before long he was attending chorus rehearsals once a week, pretending to read the notes of familiar songs and following the leader's directions for "expression." He even became an associate member of the local Glee Club, joining in the general singing at smokers and occasionally dreaming of taking a regular voice trial.

It was now only a lack of time that restricted Daddy's singing mostly to the home. At least he could insinuate a little vocal music into every family gathering or party, even using it as an excuse to break up a late bridge or poker game. The children were now old enough to have their friends come to the house at odd hours, and with Mother's connivance and occasional co-operation from Daddy these gatherings were easily turned into singing games and square dances.

THE CASE OF THE NON-MUSICAL DADDY

radio had been supplemented by a piano of the spinet type, and Daddy began to think of himself as an instrumentalist as well as a singer. Nobody criticized his early efforts at the keyboard, and at least he made a point of playing softly. Mother and the children were as helpful as they had been on the vocal side, and it was a proud day when they were all able to play either the top or the bottom of "Chopsticks" at will.

Daddy had acquired a little book called Fun with Music (published by the gospel singer, Homer Rodeheaver, of all people), and this showed him how to play three chords, which were enough to accompany most of the songs he knew. He found that the same patterns of harmony would work satisfactorily in any key and that it was not difficult to add a simple melody to a consistent bass.

UP TO this point the musical education of Daddy had been accomplished without the aid of a professional teacher. When he finally got around to engaging one for the children, he made sure that their music would continue to be a game, without any of the drudgery that is completely wasted on the average pupil. Practice was turned into recreation, and there was never a suggestion of technique for its own sake, or of playing merely to "show off."

With the piano as a basis, a family orchestra was gradually developed. One of the boys had acquired a small accordion and another of the children picked up the harmonica at a tender age. In time, they managed some fairly successful duets, with the eventual addition of a guitar and ukulele. Neighbors occasionally brought in a recorder or a saxophone, and there was one rather painful experiment with a self-styled violinist. Luckily there were enough other instruments and voices to drown out the worst of the scratching.

This is not a merely fanciful story of musical progress in an idealized home. There are Daddies all over the United States who have discovered the possibilities of "music for fun" in just this way. Some of them are better at it than others, but they enjoy themselves equally. They take their music as they take their golf, going as far as they like without working too hard at it. The old inferiority complex has disappeared.

Those who have no de tastes in music take music m as the most casual entertain To them it serves as little than background noise, bein egated to something like the tion that music has in a det film. E audience for instrumental usic—piano, violin, cello, clari- etc.—is also a large one, gh its size cannot be as accur- estimated. Possibly the reason the audience for opera is ler than the audience for estral music lies in a lack of ortunity to hear opera. Aside the Metropolitan and the Francisco Opera, there are ively few companies giving an nded season. Opera is devilish- xpensive to produce. So we few opera companies, though ever a new company of artistic h springs into being, it finds voted public. This has hap- d in New York and in Chicago the excellent New York City er Opera began to present a intelligently, using fresh, g, mostly American voices. hough, as I said in the begin- . it is impossible to define rican taste, there are a few ral observations which we t make. First, an interest in us music was at one time a of social success. The owner ticket to the Symphony Con- . it was understood, had ar- d at financial ease and social fication. America imitated Eu- an fashion, where a love for ic was certainly the sign of ood upbringing. Vestiges of tribute to fashion still remain. e and there the love of music iluted with and deluded by tle sham, but it would be a t mistake to call America's love reign. European affection and to recognize that music has me a genuine, integral part of our American way of living.

The Board of Directors of the New York Philharmonic Society reported in September, 1850, as follows: "After the three or four first years of the existence of the Society, which were very successful in many respects, our Concerts ceased to be 'fashionable' and the friends of the undertaking saw plainly that the patronage of them would gradually decrease, until they were entirely supported by the true lovers of the art, and for that love only; and that from this period we must look for advancement only as we perceived an improved taste for instrumental music, and an appreciation of true excellence in the art among the concertgoing public. We think we can now congratulate the Society and its friends upon this rapid improvement of the public taste."

With more truth than a hundred years ago, it can now be said that music is being supported "by the true lovers of the art," and that these true lovers are numerous. Music is much more a part of the American existence than the theater, for example. Not only is the audience for music larger but it is more dispersed, not being confined to metropolitan centers.

SECOND, we may observe that our tastes are conservative. We are not especially sympathetic to musical experiments. The repertoire we like is expanding, but the rate of expansion is not very fast. We are particularly fond of the classics. If some like it hot and some like it cold, we certainly like it nine days old. But perhaps this is not a particularly American characteristic: The French public, for example, is even more conservative than we are. Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Mozart, Schubert, and Wagner continue to comprise the bulk of our concert programs and record sales, though certain works by more modern composers, works by Richard Strauss, Sibelius, Prokofieff, Stravinsky, Kabalevsky, etc., have found favor. "Serious" American composers have not found favor. Whether that is the public's fault or the composers' is a question beyond the scope of this discussion. The truly popular American music is that music which stems from Broadway—Gershwin and Cole Porter and Richard Rodgers and Irving Berlin.

Opera? Well, you can guess which are America's most popular operas: Aïda, Carmen, Traviata, Bohême, and Butterfly, then Wagner's Meistersinger, The Ring, and Richard Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier. The operatic public is even more conservative than the concert public!

Third, in the last two or three years, there has been a noticeable trend toward religious music, which is probably a concomitant of the trend toward religious literature. Whether this trend is one of deep influence, whether for example it will appreciably increase the popularity of Bach and Handel, it is difficult to say. Religion and music have always served each other.

Fourth, the movies exercise a great influence on our musical taste, and this is true both of light and serious music. The popularity of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto is in some measure due to the movies; the popularity of Chopin's Military Polonaise can be ascribed to its having been played in a successful movie: and the present vogue for "Vesti la giubba" and other operatic tenor arias is due to the popularity of Mario Lanza.

Fifth, the one great weakness of our musical life lies in our passivity. We listen and we absorb music, but we do not make enough of it ourselves. Not enough people play an instrument; not enough people gather around the piano or the guitar and sing. We have such an enormous respect for a job well done and we admire virtuosity so much that amateur music-maki has fallen into disrepute. ties not to let this factor stand in the way of fulfillment. In my classes at New York University and elsewhere, I have had the opportunity to prove to my students that they can obtain flattering results in much less time at the organ than at the piano, an instrument which requires considerable technical skill. A simple melody with simple accompaniment which would sound like a child's practice piece on the piano is made utterly appealing by the beautiful and varied tone colors of the organ.

Nor is it necessary to be an accomplished musician before undertaking organ study. In my elementary classes, I accept students without any previous musical training and I am sure that many other teachers now follow this same practice. Learning to read music at the organ, these pupils are finding an exciting new pastime. And no proud parent has ever been more greatly thrilled than I when "show them off" publicly at of our institutional concerts.

Some of these students revea fervor that is astonishing. The gineer, for instance, who beg off taking his turn at the or one week, because he had been able to practice. ALSO recall with amusement two ladies whom I think of as y paradoxes." One, a "hot" accordionist in cocktail bars when enrolled in my course, dropped a few months after its completion to tell me how happy she was her newly obtained job—as organist in a funeral parlor.

The other was the pianist for a all village church which contemplated installing an electric gan. I explained that my courses lt with light music rather than hymns in which she was interested. Nevertheless, she enrolled. me weeks later, arriving a little ore class time, I was aghast to her at the console making a y determined—but extra-curricular—effort at a piece with a wild oogie-woogie" beat.

have been asked how it is sible that I turned from the amour" of performing to the udgery" of teaching. Drudgery, eed! Is it drudgery to share with sic-hungry individuals some of joy that the organ has given ? Helping them brings such a p sense of satisfaction and accomplishment that my "playing" eer now seems to me to have n but a preparation for my present activities of teaching.

Age or station in life interpose no barriers to those who would play the organ. My classes have included a deep-sea diver, a subway motorman, a bus driver, active and retired businessmen and women, high school and college students, teachers, doctors, engineers, lawyers, housewives, a butcher, and many others, ranging in age from fourteen to seventy-five. Some of them hope to make the organ their profession. Others, suffering from emotional disturbances, find in it the engrossing hobby their doctors have recommended. To nearly all of them it means fulfillment of a dream, often long deferred.

AND it is the fulfillment of one of my dreams to be able to guide these individuals from the role of wistful listeners to the joy of having the organ's voice at their command. In a little more than two years, I have been privileged to bring this musical happiness to nearly 500 students. I cherish the hope that, through my personal classes and published courses which are being used by an increasing number of other teachers, I may have a part in bringing the organ to thousands of aspiring searchers for the lost chord. And may all of them, like Maggie Murphy, some day know the pleasure of having friends gather round the organ in their parlor.

phonograph albums available. Yet there are but a handful that meet all the requirements for really outstanding products. Consider the requirements which should be met in such a selection.

First of all, the records must be entertaining. If they are not entertaining to Robby, Robby will listen to them once or twice, and then put them aside. Having heard them once or twice, no great impression has been made on him, so that no matter what else the record has to offer, it has all gone to waste. Entertainment value must come first, no matter what the ulterior motive happens to be.

IN determining whether a record has real entertainment value, the greatest test is, of course, Robby himself. What may seem to be an interesting story or situation to you may not have that intangible quality which makes Robby want to hear the same story or music again and again and again. Obviously, if we must depend on Robby's demand for repetition, then suspense and dramatic story plot might well be the least of our considerations. An example is the popular album titled Bozo at the Circus, which has practically no plot or story at all. Yet I know of children who have worn out as many as nine albums, and still wanted the same album instead of another.

The reason for this is that certain ideas properly depicted on a phonograph record will create in a child's mind imaginative situations which are so pleasing to him that he wants to relive these situations many times over. Certain sounds, both vocal and musical, will be so appealing or humorous to a child that he will almost never tire of hearing them. Let Robby himself tell you which albums have this appeal to him. Fortunately, unlike other forms of entertainment, the phonograph record can be pre-sampled. Let Robby listen in a record booth, or make it a point to see that he hears recorded radio programs for children, and he'll pretty quickly tell you what he really wants.

Other top examples of the best in entertaining record albums include many of the Bozo series, Genie, The Magic Record, Little Orley and Uncle Lumpy, and Howdy Doody's Laughing Circus. Those albums featuring Bugs Bunny and his cartoon friends have all been extremely well done, as well as certain, but not all, of the W Disney albums. Probably the b of these is Little Toot.

Certain records of childre songs have been found to be n appealing, such as Gene Aut "Rudolph the Red Nosed R deer," "Frosty the Snow Man," "Peter Cottontail." Another bum that stands out head shoulders for sheer pleasure is Walter Lantz album, Woody W pecker's Talent Show. Any of above, in Robby's hands, will, w out question, delight him, stir imaginative processes, and him endless pleasure for m years to come.

Creating an interest in music Robby can perhaps best be d with phonograph records. But l not make the mistake of attempt to force on his attentions the called "accepted" music for c dren. If you play Haydn's Surp Symphony for Robby, and doesn't dance with glee and ash hear it again, don't assume th is anything wrong with his ear child of Robby's age finds no b in music alone. He may like it at least not object to it. But if are really to interpret it for h make it interesting, alive, and to him, try something that was signed for that purpose.

TAKE, for example, the all Rusty in Orchestraville. Thi the story of a little boy just al Robby's age. Rusty had started take piano lessons, and was find it rather discouraging. One c after a lesson, Rusty sat down chair to brood about the tedi ness of practicing. In the chair fell asleep, and in his dream found himself in a land ca Orchestraville, where the ins ments could talk and where little boy could play any ins ment he wanted, without practic at all! Rusty talked to the ins ments, and the instruments a ally talked back. (This effect achieved by means of Sonovox, electrical device that articul musical sounds — actually ma them talk!)

Rusty had a conversation v Vera the Violin, and at Vera's vitation played something on since anyone in Orchestrav could play well. Rusty perfor part of "Zigeunerweisen" by S sate. He talked to the cello, and cello talked back, and Rusty pla "The Swan" by Saint-Saëns. talked to Tommy the Trumpet, performed the "Carnival of V ice." By this time, Rusty was re enjoying himself. He met the wo wind section, percussion, and e had the whole symphony orche n for him. Finally he met the Piano, who was a little because he heard that Rusty like him. Rusty had had a of heart by now, and sat and played Chopin's "Min- altz" beautifully. Rusty was ressed with the pleasure he m playing these instruments hat when he woke up he to the piano to practice, e he wanted to play "as well d in my dream."

n Robby listens to Rusty in traville he will, first of all, ertained. He will hear cre- r him a situation where a oy of his own age is in a land which makes an often- t-of dream of his own come he dream of playing as well teacher without all the dull ing. Having been put in a n that is most appealing to dreams and wishes, Robby ears an almost unbelievable -a violin talking. This is not e that says, and asks the o believe, that it is a violin. really an articulated violin obby can understand, and zed at. Then he hears all the instruments talk, and he Rusty, who might well be himself, play on all the in- ts in the orchestra without acticing. And he hears good performed throughout it all one as part of an exciting, ng, imaginative situation ves it meaning and, above kes it fun.

is the kind of album that bring music into Robby's e only way that it can really ght in—through his own me- f fantasy. Other albums ef- along these lines include the Tuba, Sparky's Magic Little Black Sambo, Peewee colo, and Sparky's Music . These albums all treat in such a way that it be- part of a story which main- child's interest while get- ross its real purpose.

All children's albums which properly use music, even though the story may not deal directly with music, can be of value. Music is often used to describe actions, without the use of any words at all. For example, in Walt Disney's album of Three Little Pigs, when the wolf attempts to blow down the brick house, the whole sequence is done with the use of music and sound effects alone. It is so vivid that Robby, unfamiliar with past experiences of the use of music in this way, cannot help but understand what is happening, and at the same time develop an association between the music and the word pictures.

OF COURSE, there are educational factors other than music that can be accomplished with records. Unfortunately, most of the albums which aim directly at teaching are so dull that they fail to accomplish their purpose by the mere fact that they do not gain the child's attention, and fail to cause him to listen repeatedly. There are a few exceptions, however. Some of the song albums, such as Songs of Safety, Songs of Good Behavior, etc., are effective. An album called Baby Snooks Learns creates interesting situations with Snooks and Daddy whereby children are entertained and yet learn about good table manners, cleanliness, being kind to animals, etc. The educational values of such albums are obvious.

But when you buy records for Robby, make sure you have something first of all that will entertain him—otherwise you have nothing at all. Robby's first records are important to him. They will stimulate and enlighten him. They will prepare the way for more serious enjoyment of music, books, the theater, and other adult forms of pleasure and culture. And above all, they will thrill, delight, and entertain him—all at the flick of a switch that he can turn with his own hand.

• If your roof is steeply pitched or gabled, perforated pipes will probably be better than sprinklers. But you'll need the same sort of thermostatic controls.

13 degrees cooler than the dry one at 7:00 P.M. As a matter of fact, the dry ceiling does not cool off to the same temperature as the water-cooled one until after midnight. Another unexpected advantage of the water-cooled roof is that the spray cools the surrounding air from two to five degrees. This cooled air—instead of rising like warm air— spills over the edges of the roof, in turn cools the walls.

Aside from its comfort-giving qualities, the roof spray is also good for your roof itself, especially if it happens to be an asphalt type. The reason is that sprinkling holds roofing to a lower and more even temperature, thus reducing expansion and contraction and the vaporization of the volatile oils in the asphalt. Result: The roof lasts longer.

You can see that a sprinkled roof has a lot of comfort-significance—and not just for Florida, either. In three-fourths of the U.S.A. roofs take a terrific beating from the summer sun. In the dry and cloudless Great Plains, solar radiation is actually more severe than in Florida where the afternoon clouds temper the sun's heat somewhat.

The sprinkler system used in the Florida experiments is not particularly complicated. It consists of rotating sprinkler heads not unlike the kind you use on your garden hose. These are spaced over the roof so that the whole surface is covered by the spray. They are connected by ordinary piping to a thermostatically operated valve. But before you try to assemble one yourself, you'd better understand the following points:

1. Have you got the water? The University of Florida tests showed that it took about ten gallons of water per month to keep a square foot of roof surface cooled down 100 degrees during the four-mo period between June and Sept ber. Are your water rates enough to make this economic More important still, does y community permit the use of wa for cooling? Some do not.

2. It must be thermostatic controlled. Oddly enough, much water is almost as bad as little. The roof wants to be j damp enough to evaporate spray as it falls. To control sprinklers—that is, cut them and on—you must have a ther stat on the roof, set at around degrees. Each time the sun wa the roof above this temperatu the thermostat will turn on spray; when the roof cools do it turns the sprays off. This w surprisingly little water is requir In the Florida tests, the sprays for about half the time betw 9:00 A.M. and 4:00 P.M. The of the time, not at all.

3. Your roof doesn't have to flat, as was the case in the U versity experiments. But if it pitched or gabled, the perfora pipe system shown above will pr ably be less conspicuous and m practical. Here, instead of spr you have a system of perfora pipes, through which water trick down the roof. The amount of ter and distance between pipes to be worked out so roof is j damp when system is on. And, course, this version too must thermostatically controlled to erate efficiently.

4. A water-cooled roof is no cu all. But it may easily mean difference between a comforta and an uncomfortable house t summer. If you are lucky enou to have summer air conditioning will reduce the load on your s tem perceptibly. If your roof is sulated, sprinklers will help insulation to do a much more eff tive job.

You can see from this that, wh the sprinkled roof is a simple s tem based on a simple princi it's not something any housew can rig up. You'll need a g plumber for that. But if you w to convince yourself of its effecti ness, try a simple experiment: I your garden sprinkler up on roof over the screened porch that hot attic bedroom and turn on. It won't take long for you see that sprinkling the roof mak a whale of difference these summer nights.

The salesman, if he is a topnotcher, may ask you several questions before he even tries to demonstrate his pianos. Don't resent it. He is simply trying to help you select the piano best adapted to your purpose and your purse. He may ask you if you have children who are expected to study the piano, may want to know the approximate size of your living room and the type of furniture therein. Frank answers to such questions will save you much time. The salesman is genuinely anxious that you be happy with your selection for years to come. If he sells you a piano, he has the fervent hope that you will remark to all and sundry, "I just love my piano!" He knows that the name of the piano is easily seen by those who frequent your home. And the chances are that his is the only store in the community franchised to sell that particular make.

Bait advertising. There is a form of advertising indulged in, to a certain extent, by fringe dealers in nearly all types of merchandise. It is frowned upon by Better Business Bureaus and never indulged in by first-class retailers. This technique involves an advertisement, sometimes in the classified columns of the newspaper, offering a specific item, new or used, often mentioned by the trade name, at a very low price. When prospective customers respond, every effort is made to avoid selling this specific item advertised, while strenuous effort is made to sell other merchandise at a higher price. In other words, the specific article advertised is "nailed to the floor." A variant is to show bait merchandise so obviously inferior in quality that no one wants it at any price, while attempts are made to demonstrate it with assumed seriousness. Adjacent to it is much better looking merchandise at much higher prices. It is quite natural for the disappointed bargain hunter to inquire about the more attractive articles. Unfortunately, a few fringe dealers use bait in the piano business. Avoid them as you would a pestilence! In general—be suspicious of "great bargains!"

Second-hand pianos. In buying a used piano, the reliability of the retailer is of the highest importance. During World War II, when nearly everything was under price control, the Office of Price Administration held meetings in several cities from coast to coast in an endeavor to find a formula for ceiling prices on used pianos. The attempt was abandoned. Those meetings demonstrated that no specifications were adequate to affix a value to a used piano. One well-cared-for piano may retain much of its original performance value throughout the years, while another instrument of the same make and of the same age, having lacked good care, might have lost much of its original value as a musical instrument. Yet there are thousands upon thousands of used pianos, reconditioned to a close approximation of their original performance, purchased every year. It is difficult to think of another article, functioning with moving parts, that will perform well for as many years, if properly cared for. Practically all reliable dealers operate good reconditioning shops with expert workers. They have access to new parts which are replaceable. But it is impossible the layman to detect hidden fa in a second-hand piano. There it is always best to accept the v of a reliable dealer, and place responsibility on him. The m of the piano has no responsib for the performance of an old strument. Be very cautious w attempting to purchase a pian a home, unless you have known the owners and the pi Practically all old pianos r reconditioning unless they been well serviced—which m something more than mere tu —by a competent technician least once a year.

Piano guarantees. Your guarantee is the reputation of s and maker. Piano manufactu will probably contend that reputation of the maker is of importance. However, the fac may be a thousand or more n away from your home, while seller is probably a member of community. The National P Manufacturers Association re mends a five-year guarantee aga faulty workmanship or mater That is the guarantee you will with most new pianos, from most costly to the lowest price you ask for it. Some maker lower-priced instruments giv longer guarantee purely as a ing feature. So don't be conf if you find that some famous-n piano in the upper-price bra is accompanied by a five-year g antee, while some other mak one-half or one-third of the p is guaranteed for ten years. cidents of piano failure becaus faulty construction are exceedi rare. A written long-term gua tee on any article must be worded as to give the guara protection from the few unscr lous owners who might den reimbursement for the result their own carelessness.

kery also fall into broad ure-categories. French cook-or instance, rests on a basis at stock. If you will look
, you will see that all
h soups, sauces, and casseishes are built on this foun-
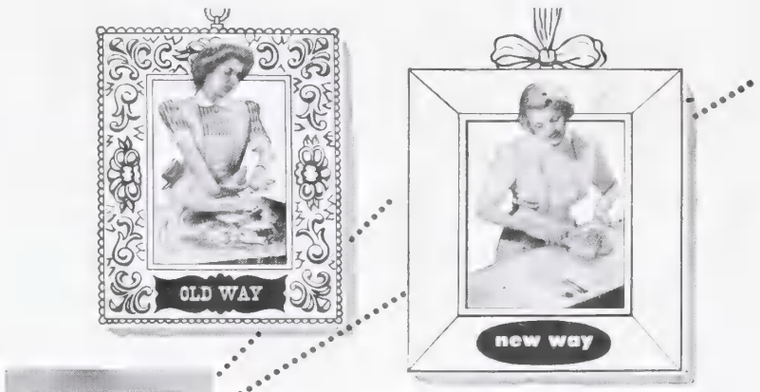
, and their success depends richness and flavor of the itself. (It takes a pound of without fat or bones to make of good rich stock.) Other s should blend with it, but never obliterate it entirely. This calls for delicate flavoring—a talent of which the French are proud.



There is an important structural difference between the French sauces for meat, and the only meat sauce we are accustomed to using, which is gravy. The basis of gravy is the juice which drips from a roast or any piece of meat. We use the unthickened meat juice as "pan gravy" or what the French call "jus." Or we make thickened gravy by subjecting the meat juice to heat, and when it is nearly dry, diluting it with water and thickening it with flour. In this case, it is the action of the heat on the meat juice that gives the gravy its characteristic flavor. The same kind of change occurs when heat is applied to sugar and to starch. The action of heat on sugar changes its flavor to caramel. The action of heat on starch turns the flavor of bread to that of toast.

But French meat sauces have a different structure. They are based on essence of meat which has been extracted by boiling the meat in water, so that the juice does not come into direct contact with the heat. It is this essence of meat, diluted in water, which is called stock. Strong, reduced stock is the basis of four out of five of the basic French sauces.

FRENCH cookery recognizes five fundamental sauces. All the others, with the exception of a few so-called "independent" sauces, are based on these five. They are: brown sauce (espagnole) based on brown stock made of beef; white sauce (velouté) based on white stock made of chicken or veal; cream sauce (béchamel) based on white stock and milk; tomato sauce based on white stock and tomatoes; and hollandaise based on butter and thickened by eggs.

Until canned meat concentrates were available, French sauces were beyond the scope of the average American cook because of the fuss and fuming involved in making the stock. But the new meat concentrates have changed all that. They have placed the production of these sauces within the reach of every one. This makes it well worth your while to understand how these sauces are put together and how they are varied.

You should look upon these basic sauces as a musician looks upon the basic chords. Once you have got them firmly fixed in your mind, you will be able to start making combinations of your own—to cook by ear. You will no longer be limited to brown gravy and "cream sauce" made of milk thickened by a butter-and-flour paste. True, your improvised cookery will not be traditional French, but it will be good just the same.

A different system of cookery is the Italian type which is based on mixtures of oil, acid, spices, and vegetable juice. Unlike sauces based on meat stock, the success of these depends on the seasoning. Here are two recipes for tomato sauce which illustrate the two different methods of approach.

Tomato Sauce (Based on Meat Stock)

1 slice salt pork (3 tablespoons, chopped)
2 tablespoons chopped onions
3 tablespoons chopped carrots
¼ cups flour
2½ cups canned tomatoes (or 1 No. 2 can)
1½ cups white stock (use canned chicken broth)
½ clove garlic, crushed
1 herb bunch (2 parts parsley to 1 part each thyme and bay leaf)
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar

Fry out salt pork. Brown the onions and carrots in the pork fat. Add flour and cook until it begins to brown. Add remaining ingredients. Stir until the sauce thickens and then simmer for an hour.

Tomato Sauce (Without Meat Stock)

3 tablespoons olive oil
1 clove garlic
1 onion, chopped
1 stalk celery, chopped
3½ cups canned tomatoes (or 1 No. 2½ can)
1 can tomato paste
½ teaspoon salt
1 bay leaf
½ teaspoon oregano
½ teaspoon basil
½ teaspoon pepper

Brown onion, garlic, and celery in oil. Add tomatoes, tomato paste, and salt, and let simmer gently for an hour. Fifteen minutes before it is done add the season

Compare these two recipes you will see that the substitu of an extra cup of tomatoes a can of tomato paste for the stock made it unnecessary to flour for thickening since the tomatoes make the sauce self-t ening. But it was necessary to seasoning.

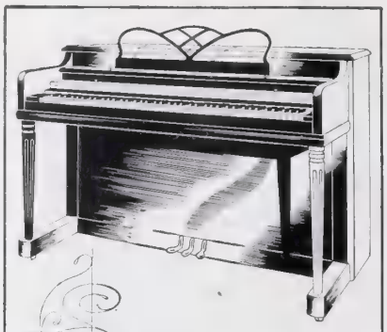
With a highly flavored vegeta base sauce, a little meat go long way. Try serving it ov pound of Italian sausage, or sautéed meat balls made o pound of chopped meat, half and half beef. Or substitute fis meat by using a can of tun

An extreme example of this of oil, acid, spice, and vegeta juice cookery is to be found in following recipe for tamale pie

Tamale Pie

Use six or seven canned tam Remove the husks, if there are and place them in the bottom baking dish. Place several slic cooked chicken over them. Ma sauce by mixing the followin

1 tablespoon olive oil
1 tablespoon sugar
1 cup chili sauce
½ cup raisins, chopped
½ cup whole ripe olives
Salt to taste



Pour the sauce over the and tamales. Sprinkle a cu grated cheese on top and bak 325° F. for one hour.

Undoubtedly, by this time, have guessed that our highly ored relishes like catsup and sauce are the hold-overs, the ve ial remains of highly flav dishes such as this. In reali this, you have also done somet else. You have learned that creative cook is the analytical

Often, songs are created by the children as a result of these activities. There are times when the class becomes a rhythm band. Through cymbals, drums, rhythm sticks, sand blocks, and tambourines, the child is introduced to the world of instrumental music. At other times those who are learning to play the piano and other instruments share their music with the class. Frequently, the children listen quietly to the recordings of beautiful music.

AS JOHNNY and Mary move into the fourth, fifth, and sixth grades, singing includes unison, two-part, and eventually three-part songs suited to their age, interests, and musical development. Many elementary schools have organized choirs of children from these grades which provide music for PTA programs, school assemblies, and many other occasions throughout the school year.

Interest is maintained in the listening program by continuing programs of live and recorded music. A good number of classes are able to take advantage of radio programs designed for their use. Through listening to music, Johnny and Mary eventually learn to know by sight and sound the instruments of the orchestra and the band. Discrimination and artistic judgment are developed as the class becomes acquainted with great music and musicians of the past and present.

Tunes or dances for special occasions are also produced. Perhaps a simple operetta is written as a class project. Many rich experiences follow the writing of the story, then setting it to music, creating dances, designing costumes and stage sets. The creative ability of the children blossoms under the skillful teacher.

Rhythmic activities are not neglected in the upper grades. There is fun and much to be learned from the singing games and folk dances which are planned for these years.

For those children interested in playing an instrument, many schools plan the start of instruction in the elementary grades, usually the third or fourth grade. Preceding the study of real instruments, possibly in grade three, interested children are often given the opportunity to learn to play one of the simple melody instruments, such as the Song Flute or Tonette. Training on these simple inexpensive instruments is very helpful in determining which pupils have the interest, perseverance, and talent to be successful with an instrument of band or orchestra.

TALENT or aptitude tests, such as the Seashore Measures of Musical Talent, are often used as a means of proper guidance. A careful check of each child is made to make sure that he has the physical characteristics essential to success on the instrument of his choice. All of these tests are basic to the success of the pupil in instrumental study and are also a means of avoiding financial loss through the purchase of the wrong instrument.

As a rule, beginning instrumental classes in the elementary school are devoted to the more common instruments such as the violin, clarinet, cornet, trombone, flute, and drums. Class piano lessons are given in many schools, and it is encouraging to note the increased interest in the study of piano in the many cities where class lessons are available.

What about the child whose parents cannot afford to purchase an instrument? Today "P.S. 36," like many other schools, has as a part of its regular equipment a quantity of the common instruments in addition to the unusual ones, such as French horn, tuba, cello. These instruments are rented or loaned to children. Women's clubs, service clubs, and parent groups frequently assist the Board of Education in expanding the supply of instruments, in order to give every deserving child a chance in instrumental music.

After a certain amount of progress is made by the boy or girl in the study of an instrument, membership in the school instrumental ensemble is open to him. In the larger elementary schools both bands and orchestras are organized. If a school is small and can have only one organization, an orchestra is considered desirable since the orchestra includes the stringed instruments as well as those used in the band.

Three bar rest

Yes, progress has been made in the teaching of music. But we do fall short in certain areas. In some instances the music curriculum is too specialized and is appropriate for only the select group of talented students. And one of the most serious problems retarding the development of school music throughout the country is the lack of understanding, on the part of many school administrators and parents, as to what music education is and what it can contribute to the school program.

The question comes again and again from parents, "What can we do to aid our school officials in developing the opportunities in music?" The answer which seems to be most important is, first of all: Actively support your schools! Inertia on the part of parents and other citizens is depriving children of the proper teaching staff, equip

You will vote for the elec- tion of school-board members who will maintain and support competent school administrators. All of this is necessary before we consider music. The indifference of thousands of parents to the needs of their schools has tragically forced boards of education to maintain educational programs that forego the benefits of music education. You, the parents, must help to change this condition.

His well-known quotation ginning "God Almighty first ted a Garden . . .") is one of ut 75 of varying lengths which prise the current book from Trovillion Private Press.

ypically a gift book, this small me of Flowers from Old Gar- s contains quotations garnered n many centuries of writing, t of them in praise of gardens. he readers will take delight in inders of the early English ks, such as Sir Anthony Fitz- bert's Treatyse in which appear lines: "And in the begynnynge Marche, or a lyttel afore, is e for a wyfe to make her gar- and to gette as many good es and herbes as she canne, and specially suche as be good for the potte, and to eate: and as ofte as nede shall requyre, it must be weded, for els the wedes wyl ouergrowe the herbs."

Others will enjoy more Joseph Addison's straightforward description of his kitchen garden, where he is more pleased to survey his "rows of coleworts and cabbages, with a thousand nameless pot-herbs, springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heat, or withering in an air and soil that are not adapted to them."

There are quotations from the Chinese, from Mahomet, from Goethe, Charles Lamb, Thoreau, Hawthorne, and Eleanour Sinclair Rohde, among others. The Earl of Chesterfield writes in a letter: "The furor hortensis has seized me, and my acre of ground here affords me more pleasure than Kingdoms do to Kings."

William Coles is aptly quoted from 1656: "A House though otherwise beautiful, yet if it hath no Garden belonging to it is more like a Prison than a House."

old stand-bys which cry to be experimented with. (For instance, try tangerine juice over sliced bananas. Use frozen concentrate diluted according to directions.)

Yet most cooks admit they are in a rut, using the same recipes and the same ingredients over and over again. They confess their constant refrain is "What shall I have for dinner tonight?" Yet there is a multitude of possibilities around the corner, waiting only for the perceptive eye to see them.

Before we get down to cases, here is a list of 17 general types of recipes which you can compound with fruit.

Fruit and Sugar

Fruit juice and sugar=a SYRUP or a JELLY.

Fruit syrup and water=a PUNCH.

Fruit syrup, frozen=WATER ICE.

Fruit and sugar=CANNED, PRESERVED, or CANDIED FRUIT.

Combinations of fruit, fresh or preserved, with or without liqueur =a COMPOTE, or a FRUIT CUP, or a FRUIT SALAD.

Fruit, Sugar, and Cream

Cooked fruit purée and whipped cream=a FOOL.

Fruit purée and whipped cream, frozen=a MOUSSE.

Fruit, Sugar, and Egg

Fruit syrup and beaten egg whites=a SNOW or a WHIP.

Fruit purée and beaten egg whites, frozen=a SHERBERT.

Fruit purée and beaten egg whites, cooked=a SOUFFLÉ.

Fruit, Sugar, Egg, and Cream

Fruit purée, beaten egg whites, and whipped cream=a PARFAIT.

Fruit and Starch

Fruit juice and starch, thickened =a FRUIT SOUP.

Fruit cooked with bread crumbs =a BETTY.

Fruit molded in buttered bread =a CHARLOTTE.

Fruit encased in dough and boiled=a DUMPLING.

Fruit baked in crust=a PIE, TART, FLAN, TORTE, COBBLER.

Multiply this list by the two or three hundred fruits and new fruit forms you can buy, and the possibilities are staggering.

Keys to all your new opportunities are two obvious truths: 1) Fruit is no longer a seasonal food; 2) Dozens of "new" fruits have appeared on the market. Because they are strange to most Americans, they are, therefore, unrepresented and unexplained in our cookbooks. Do you know what to do with kumquats, loquats, passion fruits, prickly pears, cherimoyas, mangoes, papayas, pomegranates, guavas, jujubes, and lichees? Fresh figs, fresh grated cocoanut, avocados and fresh dates have only recently become available to us all.

Some of the new forms of fruit (such as the big new family of frozen juice concentrates) and comminuted apple juice are only a few years old. The miraculous frozen concentrates are still so new and their advantages so little realized, that only 18 per cent of American families use them, according to one recent survey.

The developments in processing fruits have been so great that, for all practical purposes, we can say they have created a new world. This new world of year-round variety makes possible basic changes in our diet and in our cooking. Our recipes need to catch up with our more progressive grocery stores.

The canned tropical fruits are probably the most exciting, for they make possible some really sensational dishes. For instance, a can of mangoes, a fresh avocado, and a blender give you the key to a memorable salad.

Tropical Salad with Avocado Cream Dressing

3 oranges
1 banana
2 or 3 heaping tablespoons crushed pineapple

Have all the ingredients thoroughly chilled before you begin. Use the mangoes just as they come out of the can. Slice one of the oranges paper thin, without removing the rind. Cut each of the slices into four parts. Peal the other two oranges and make into diced orange sections as for any fruit salad. Slice the banana. Mix the fruit and arrange it around the outside of a large shallow bowl.

Avocado Cream Dressing

1 cup whipping cream
1 avocado
¼ cup powdered sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt

Chill all ingredients before starting. Even the blender should be chilled by putting a scoop of crushed ice in it and running the motor a moment. Discard the ice and dry the machine before starting to work.

Peel and remove the stone from avocado. Cut it into small pieces. Put the cream, sugar, and salt into the blender and mix them thoroughly, but don't run the machine too long or you will turn the cream to butter. Turn the switch to high and drop in the pieces of avocado while the blender is running, letting each piece get thoroughly blended before adding the next. If the mixture becomes too heavy for the machine, remove some of it and blend only a little at a time. If still too heavy, add a little milk.

When the sauce is thoroughly blended, put it into a bowl (a glass bowl if you have one). Place the bowl in the center of the dish containing the salad and serve. The amount will serve four. Be generous with the sauce. It should be put on the salad at the last moment to keep its texture and color from being too diluted by the juices of the fruit. You need some fruit juice, however, for the flavor. If you drained the fruit, the salad would taste like nothing at all. The pale green sauce is very effective on the orange and yellow of the fruit.

This dish shows how the blender has become one of several factors that have revolutionized our conception of preparing fruit. Fresh fruits, as a rule, do not take kindly to heat. But the action of the blender in mixing and pulverizing makes it possible to homogenize fruit, alone and with other materials. Homogenized fruit is something new in the kitchen—an exciting new plaything for the cook. Homogenized apple makes it possible to have uncooked apple sauce. This has the taste of cider and the look and consistency of apple butter. You can't call blended apple "apple sauce" since "sauce" implies cooking. A new name should be invented.

Uncooked Apple Sauce

3 or 4 apples
½ cup fruit juice or water
1 to 6 tablespoons white, brown, or raw sugar
2 teaspoons lemon juice

Blend the sugar and liquids in the blender. Add cut but unpeeled apples gradually, while the machine is going. Blend until the whole thing is puréed. Serve chilled. This is good served alone with eam or as a smooth-textured ice over something else.

A whole new range of fruit fla- rs is possible because the action the blender makes is possible liquefy or liquidize the pulp, ds (not pits) and skins of al- st all fruits (except the banana ich must be peeled.) Dried fruits, tes for example, can be ground with nut meats in the blender d the resulting paste may be illed and used as a crust for it pies or unbaked chiffon pies. The use of blender-puréed fruits these new ways means that flour going to be displaced by fruit many of the things we make. ou see our food inheritance is om people to whom grain was e staple food. This accounts for e hidden starch, the flour base, so many of the things we make: eam sauce, gravy, soup, soufflés, oquettes, puddings, and pies. Before we had a tool which could irée fruit to the extent possible the blender, it was out of the estion for us to use fruits as hickening agent. Now this limita- on no longer exists. Since the rm of our food depends on the ols we have for preparing it, it comes apparent that blender wners can use fruit in the newest ays. For instance, make this new uit dessert.

Blender Fruit Dessert

Peel as many bananas as you ve people to feed. Split them ngthwise. Spread half of the lit banana pieces with the blen- r icing (below) and put the nanas together again. Cover with ncooked Apple Sauce and serve.

Blender Icing

tablespoons soft butter cups powdered sugar tablespoons flavoring (vanilla or Myers's Jamaica Rum)

Put the butter in the blender, en the sugar, then the flavoring. his icing can also be used as a ke icing or a hard sauce.

The frozen juice concentrates fer tremendous possibilities for eating new dishes and variations old ones. For instance, try add- g one-third of the contents of a n of frozen orange juice to your ing and blend it all together. hen instead of a cake icing or a rd sauce, you have a cake filling, a sauce to serve with pancakes. ry it with cornmeal pancakes ade of Cinch Cornbread Mix.

The increased variety of fruits vailable to us means that fruit will appear in more places on the menu than we have been accustomed to seeing it—in appetizers, as soups, or in place of vegetables (for example, baked banana which is so delicious with ham). The fruit drinks are really a form of fruit soup.

The new abundance of fruit, thanks to the industrialization of growing and processing, means that we will use it in new combinations with other foods. For example, we still ignore many of the uses of avocados. Avocados contain tannin which makes them bitter when cooked. (This accounts for the fact that you never see them canned.) But they are delicious added to hot foods, immediately after the food is taken from the fire, so the avocado is merely warmed but not cooked. Try adding avocado chunks to hot consommé, to vegetable soup, to chicken with rice, to an omelette or to creamed fish. Hawaiians put avocado in a curry sauce and serve it with mango chutney over rice. As you probably already know you can use peeled avocado halves as a container for any standard chicken, crab, shrimp, or lobster salad.

Mexicans make an avocado mixture called "Guacamole" (pronounced wah-ka-mó-lay) which is wonderful as a cocktail dip with potato chips or Fritos.

Guacamole

1 avocado, peeled
1 tomato, peeled

Mash and season with hot green chili or Tabasco sauce. Add 1 to 2 tablespoons minced onions. Salt and pepper to taste.

Some special combination of fruit and dairy products ought to be part of your fruit repertoire. Clotted cream (the English call it "Devonshire Cream" and the French, "crème fraîche") makes any fresh fruit a masterpiece.

Clotted Cream

Let fresh milk stand in an old-fashioned shallow milk pan overnight, until the cream has fully risen. When the separation is complete, the pan should be very, very slowly heated until the milk is quite hot, but never boils. The more slowly this is done, the better. It is a matter of hours, not minutes. When it is done, the undulations on the surface will look thick and small rings will appear. Then set the pan with the milk in it in a cool place, over night. morning it is ready to be skimmed. The finished cream is in great globs, "clots," too thick to pour. It has a nutty flavor unknown in any other form of cream. You have never tasted strawberries unless you have eaten them with Devonshire Cream.

Of course, this can only be made with fresh, unhomogenized milk, but it's worth the trouble. When enough people have tried it, there will be a demand for it commercially, which can be as easily satisfied as that for yogurt, artificially soured cream, or cottage cheese.

One of the most delicious, most famous and simplest recipes for fruit and cheese is the French Coeur a la Crème. This is nothing but cottage cheese beaten to a smooth paste, blended with cream and molded in a little heart-shaped basket which is porous enough to let the whey drain off. After this is done, the cheese is unmolded and served with fresh strawberries, little wild ones preferred.

Here is another English recipe which is guaranteed to produce that bland, self-satisfied look so characteristic of the well-fed, the look the Chinese consider the hallmark of the aristocrat. (Cheese ice with tangerine mint sauce is what it is called, although it is really a mousse.)

Cheese Ice with Tangerine Mint Sauce

2 cups lightly whipped cream
3 tablespoons freshly grated Parmesan cheese
½ teaspoon chopped parsley
Salt, pepper, cayenne, and a little paprika

Add cheese, parsley, and seasonings to cream, and place in the freezing tray of the refrigerator. Freeze quickly, stirring at least once to keep it smooth.

Mint Sauce

Peel half a dozen tangerines (or oranges) and separate them into their natural divisions. Arrange them in a dish in layers, sprinkling each layer lightly with sugar and a little chopped mint.

Make a syrup of 1 cup water with ¾ cup sugar. When cool, flavor it with 1 tablespoon of lemon juice and 1 tablespoon of sherry. Pour this over the fruit and chill.

To serve, unmold the ice. Pour the chilled citrus-mint concoction over it. Garnish it with a few fresh mint leaves and serve.

Along with the old ones is a new box of tricks that is develo into a new cuisine. You prob know the appetizer made by s kling chopped mint over ch balls of watermelon and cantal but have you ever tried sprink chopped mint over a fruit s or mixing mint jelly with cream for a fruit salad dress n seed. Sickly seedlings often ve to be tough as adults if you just keep them alive that long. business of hybridizing lilies ps into two serious obstacles. t, many lilies just don't cross rally. This is Nature's barrier, recently plant breeders learned to get around it. They use erful chemical hormones that e the plants to produce seed.

he second obstacle posed by ure is that different lilies bloom different times of year. A few s ago, horticulturists at the ce-Thompson Institute perfed a way of storing living pole even from one year to the t. Today, a lily breeder is free time-to-bloom handicap, even he wild lily grows in a remote, ost inaccessible part of the ld, as many do. In fact, warulated interest in modern comication opened many new areas he world and revealed the exnce of unknown lilies. Rapid munication has given us one ld, at least horticulturally aking. The modern lily breeder ws upon wild species, regardof their origin. He can fly over l or pollen or live bulbs. The Rainbow Hybrids, for exam- (page 78), combine dauricum ongolia), concolor (China), aurantiacum (So. Europe).

DAY, antibiotics and the newest pest killers make it possible aise seedling lilies to flowering e. One new chemical compound, in the experimental stage, exts a startling growth-stimulateffect on lily seedlings, based narily, it seems, on its come destruction of all fungus and asitic growth.

hen, too, large numbers of sses—many thousands each r—are essential to provide a hematical chance for all possimixtures of the genes that denine heredity. Only modern, e growers can afford this. To- the large lily breeders hire le crews of college students to e mass crosses. This work res in acres of new lilies, most of ch are no improvement on their ents, of course. But the chance discovering a really fine new is greatly enhanced.

Do hybrids occur in Nature? bably they do. Some lily exts think they occur frequently. ny event, natural hybrids rarely discovered. If they differ radily from their parents, then they differ radically in their requirements—and so are not adapted to the prevailing conditions. They thrive only if the particular growing conditions are also greatly disturbed. Eventually they die unless the habitat is greatly changed through earthquake or flood, or through a change in climate due to altered drainage and the influence of man (cattle grazing, deforestation, etc.). Nursery-grown seedling hybrids, however, have an excellent chance to survive. Competition between seedlings can be eliminated and special growing conditions can be created to nurture weak plants.

SUDDEN changes in character, mutations, also occur in Nature. The famed Regale lily is thought to be an example. The centifolium lily probably was the original parent. Lily breeders have made a variety of crosses of Regale and centifolium. So today we have the George Creelman lily, also the Myddleton House form, Pride of Charlotte, and the Shelburne hybrids. Some of these have been combined with sulphureum and Sargentiae to produce the new Olympic and Green Mountain Hybrids (latter shown on page 79). The Crow hybrids also seem to have this parentage.

Not all hybrid lilies are worth growing, of course. It requires large-scale production and continuous selection to keep the strains up to standard or to improve them. The temptation is always present to grow a lot of bulbs from seed and sell them as "X" hybrid when they are really nothing better than ordinary lilies. So know your nursery. Everything depends upon the originality and taste of the lily breeder.

Look to see if he has adequate cold-storage facilities. Lilies must be treated as living plants, not as dormant bulbs. August is the ideal planting time for madonna lilies; October for all other types. Spring delivery is advisable only where the climate prohibits fall planting. Expertly stored, lilies do survive the winter in good condition, but they really need the longer time in the ground to make the big root system that insures most complete success. It is a waste of your money to buy dried-up, desiccated bulbs like those seen lying in bins or on the counters of garden stores across the country each spring. A garden store without cold-storage equipment has no business selling lilies across the counter. Fortunately, lily bulbs ship well, so you can buy by mail from the firms that specialize in lilies and store the bulbs intelligently.

Lilies grow best in a mildly acid soil—about pH 6.5, if you test your soil. The soil must be aerated well. Lily roots need lots of oxygen. If your soil is inclined to be sticky and clayey, mix in peat generously—a three-inch layer isn't too much. Lilies need ample moisture in the soil, but the bulbs rot if the soil is swampy. This is true for all types of lilies. Occasionally you do see a lily growing wild in swampy land, but invariably the bulb rests on top of a hidden rock that keeps it up out of the flooded soil. Lilies are happiest with a flow of moisture—sub-irrigation—such as you might find along a gentle slope. Madonna lilies need a drier location than most.

ALL lilies need sunshine and fresh air. Lily man Jan de Graaff calls it "a happy, healthy location." They need a little shade in hot climates—filtered sunlight, as under a shade tree pruned high up from the ground. If you can't grow grass in dense shade under your tree, don't expect lilies to thrive.

Lilies are gross feeders. Despite the oft-repeated tales, they thrive when fed liberally with compost, manure, and plant food chemical. Mulches? Yes, definitely. Lilies grow best when their roots are in the shade, their heads in the sun—but lilies cannot compete successfully with strong-growing shrubs, or weeds, or perennials.

Madonna lilies should be covered with not more than an inch of soil, once they are settled in place. Cover other lilies four or five inches deep. This is better than the deep planting so often recommended. A lily planted too deep can't push itself up, but a lily that is too near the surface will pull itself down to the level at which it grows best under the micro-climate and soil conditions in the new home.

Lilies are sold in a wide variety of bulb sizes, so check this when comparing prices. The Rainbow and Fiesta hybrids still are usually sold only in mixed colors, but you can buy the Mid-Century hybrids in a dozen named varieties. There is considerable individual variation in the new white trumpet lilies, sold as Green Mountain hybrids and Shelburne hybrids, but not nearly as much as in pink trumpets. Some growers everything that shows any pi ness. Others sell only the pinks—Pink Select and Pink S burne. There also seems to be q a difference in depth of pink, pending upon the local clim The Champlain hybrids are a product of breeding for pink tr pets, but only occasionally duce pink flowers.

As the photograph shows, new Cascade madonna is va superior in flower shape and rangement to its wild parent. Aurelian hybrids (also called "S burst") are not yet as comm offered as the others shown, many gardeners rate them as best because of the smartness their color styling in lemon-yell and chartreuses. They are not available as named lilies. The I lywood hybrids (not shown) ar a slightly different type of tr pet lily, mainly in oranges and r u're a giddy gardener if you lieve that dollar in your pocket worth even 50 cents. United tes News & World Report re- ts the current value as 31 cents. e 69 unusable pennies you no ger have to spend disappeared ce 1900. And 13 of them were t during the last six years. As presentative George Bender, of io, plaintively asked, "When e dollar) gets down to zero, do start over?"

back to vegetable gardening, increase your planting space. l you can help stop that down- rd trend. You can stretch that k-sliding dollar from 31 cents nearly 50 cents.

ke a look at the prices in the oduce markets. Even New York's ird Avenue sidewalk stores are ling carrots for 12 cents a bunch bout 2 cents a carrot). Cauli- wer is 38 cents a head. Cabbage n go up to 60 cents for a good- e head. Lettuce is 18 cents and nach about 23 cents a pound.

esn't seem like much? Add m up for a family of five and u'll be startled. The normal usewife looks at the daily or ekly grocery bill and sighs at apparently slight increases. But the yearly bill that is stagger- g. A family will eat up to 910 unds of yellow, green, or leafy getables in a year. Multiply this nount by the median price of se vegetables (approximately 23 nts this month) and your total cost is $209.30. For less than $25 you can grow these vegetables at home.

A thousand carrots can be grown for one dollar. Buy them and you'll pay nearly $20. A dozen cabbages may cost $7, but 12 transplants won't exceed a dollar. You can go on like this for every vegetable in a garden catalog and each one, home-grown, will show a slight to large savings. Oddly enough, the smaller the vegetable and the less room it occupies, plus the possibility of storage, the greater your savings and the farther you stretch your dollar. Beets are a better bet than celery, and cabbage will bow financially to rutabaga.

Figures can lie, facts can be wrong, comparisons can be fatal. Moreover, it is difficult to compute the expenses of gardening. But the important fact is this: The wide disparity between the cost of what you grow and the cost of what you buy is so great that home-gardening will always be the easiest way of adding dollars to your income.

Now, especially, is the month for saving time and labor and money. Your spring expenses are over. Seeds and plant food are on hand. The hard work and the earlier gardening binge are finished. The soil is softly textured from the initial spading and doesn't have to be reworked. Most of the weeds have been pulled and not many more are likely to appear.

It's a lazy month, for the sun is hot and the soil is warm. There is little you have to do to get plants to grow. Germination is quick, plant growth is rapid. But, no matter how rapidly plants mature during midsummer and later, in fall they fruit slowly. That is the special miracle of July and August planting. You'll never taste better vegetables than those ripened slowly in the fall. It brings out the full sweetness inherent in all vegetables.

You must garden in reverse now. Spring crops germinate slowly, grow rapidly as the weather becomes warmer, fruit quickly. You catch your crops, as it were, on the fly before they become tasteless and woody. You dig, you hoe, you mulch, and scatter plant food. A busy period, a time of violence erupting after winter seclusion. Now it's over. Take it easy, for the best is yet to come and you don't have to work hard to get it.

Vegetables you can plant this month—and there's more than a baker's dozen—are for the most part excellent for winter storage and for canning or freezing. All of the cabbage family: cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, and Chinese cabbage as transplants; kohlrabi and kale from seeds. Beans, all of them too, and chard, squash, and sweet corn. New Zealand spinach, if you like it. For later planting (August 10th), add beets and carrots. They won't mature to more than one-half or two-thirds of their normal size, but that makes for the finest eating. Complete your late list (August 15th) with Brussels sprouts, collards, dandelion, horseradish, lettuce, mustard, parsnips, spinach, turnips, and rutabaga.

That's a lot of vegetables any way you want to look at it. Good dietary variety as well. Many of these vegetables can stand a touch of frost and, significantly, their edible qualities are improved. Frost on Brussels sprouts keeps the small heads hard and meaty. Parsnips are never as sweet as when pulled from nearly frozen ground.

Vegetables you can't plant are equally important. Don't waste time on eggplants and peppers. Okra and pumpkins are out. Leave the melons strictly to Florida and Southern California. Ignore the large bulbous onions since they must ripen before frost injures them and they become susceptible to disease in storage.

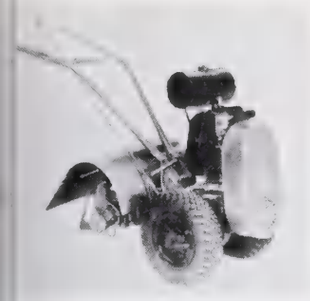
I like to take a chance, though, on peas in August. More often than not, enough pods develop and add a fillip to the end of the gardening season. Cucumbers, too, if grown in large pots or tubs where they can be somewhat protected. Celery was always added when I had the room, particularly in California with its mild fall climate. Here, in the east, I prefer to place the emphasis on vegetables that store easily and for long periods without deteriorating. And chives, naturally, that are potted in September and placed in the kitchen window. They look nice there and furnish without effort the extra edge of seasoning that makes an omelette a savory companion to morning coffee and toast.

To get the best results consider your "planting dates" which are ignored or viewed with suspicion by entirely too many gardeners. They, as the outgrowth of the weather, are the most limiting aspect of gardening. In July and August they are the difference between success and failure. For example, take the date of the first killing frost (October 10th in this latitude), subtract from it the number of days it takes a vegetable to mature —and that's the latest possible safe date to plant.

There is dollar-stretching in this rule and garden safety as well. It is heartbreaking to plant cucumbers in mid-August, watch the vines grow and then, one morning, find that frost has cut them down before they bore fruit. It is useless and senseless. Make every gardening day return to you its full dividend of harvest. To be completely safe, add two more weeks to the maturity time of each vegetable in order to extend the harvest period.

Your frost date may be different from mine. It may come sooner above New York and Connecticut; later below. But October 1st to 10th can be considered a national average. After all, there are only about ten states which have small areas in which vegetables may be grown the year round; and less than seven which don't have an October deadline, or earlier.

How can you estimate the amount of food you will require? What will you need for current consumpt and how much will you need storage or canning or freezi Well, the University of Delaw Extension Bulletin #34, M 1941, suggests that a family of for a period of one year ne ten to 15 bushels of potatoes (w or sweet); 390 to 520 pound tomatoes, citrus fruits or most vegetables and fruits; 520 to pounds of yellow, green, or l vegetables; 390 to 780 pound other vegetables; 65 to 130 po of dried peas and beans.



Another way of checking on amount of food you need is the partment of Agriculture pamp which lists, per person, these quirements: asparagus—a 20 row; beets—a 2-foot row with cessive plantings; carrots, the s The pamphlet goes on to list plantings of cabbage, each i ten-foot row; and the same Brussels sprouts. A three-foot of chard, collards, and lettu subject to your own taste an clination. And a one-foot ro radishes, succession-cropped or more times in keeping with appetite.

Gardening comes naturally to children and most of them like it. The trouble is that parents usually interfere. Certainly children have "four feet" which they can unintentionally place in the darnest spots. They can often damage more plants than they grow. So give them a small plot (4 by 5 feet) of their own. if they want it. They are fascinated when a seedling breaks through the ground. Eating their own carrots is a pleasure and not a meal-time chore.

Children can understand the growth and development of a plant and its ultimate end in a kitchen sauce pan. They enjoy scratching the earth and sowing seeds. They learn that it takes time. that patience is needed to wait for the fruiting crop. It is something about which they can't have their own way.

Let your children help you garden. Midsummer is the time it is most easily accomplished. Give them a gourd to plant and they will play with the dried fruits all winter. They relish a marigold. when it is in bloom. out of all proportion to the value of the flower. They are quick to sense the utility of vegetable growing.

Put them to work, if they have no garden-sense, to cutting out circular discs of tar paper. Show t how to slip it and clip it about stem of a cabbage plant as a tection from maggots. Take vantage of their natural urg thrust sticks in the ground an them help you stake your peas beans. A stepped-on lima sprout is a very small price to for the improved camaraderie tween you and your children w gardening can bring.

Give children a chance to be us and to learn that gardening is as well. The other day my neigh remarked, "I didn't start garde until I was 34." With regret added. "I wish someone had sta me sooner." There's the rub; many people wait so long. T miss the pleasure. they overl the usefulness. they don't un stand the satisfaction of garde until it's almost too late. On my sons. Laurie. at the age of could twist a carrot out of ground or put five drops of min oil on an ear of bantam corn the air of an expert. Maybe, w they come of age. they won't gar but. at least. they began early realize the spiritual and phys importance of a garden. At le they'll know that a home-gr vegetable is the best poss method of stretching what's of the steadily shrinking dolla

Table by W. & J. Sloane, San Francisco

No wonder Adelaide is asking her mother such a question. These beautiful Salem braids by National Carpeting are magically two carpets in one! Yes, they're reversible... as warm and colorful on one side as they are on the other. Magically durable, too. Salem braids are made of pure, long-fibre linen that far outwears other materials. And to save Mommy work and worry, her new Salem oval is moth-proof and fire-resistant. In fact, there's no other carpet at any price like a Salem braid. Yet Salem braids cost considerably less than other kinds of braided carpets! Available in leading department stores in solid or multi-colors, rounds or ovals, from 3′ to 18′ diameters.

ople want to know what other eople are like. And especially hey want to know what the rich, famous, the successful, and the nted are like. The demand for graphy—both the gossipy biog- hy of word of mouth and the nal biography of the documented k—is as unending as curiosity lf. In popular biography it is little things that count. In The of Samuel Johnson Boswell te. "I cannot allow any frag- nt whatever that floats in my nory concerning the great sub- of this work to be lost." Bos- l was very right. We want to out how our heroes behaved in umstances that were similar to se of our lives, how they dealt h the landlord, the tax collector, publisher, the patron. And with e and sweetheart! This knowl- le establishes a connection be- en them and us.

So it is that music lovers like to w that Beethoven changed his gings continually and was at time obliged to pay rent for ee apartments; that he scribbled tches for his compositions on surface that was handy, includ- the window shade, and that he pped decorating the window des in this fashion only when landlord sold them as valuable ographs; that he thought out compositions while walking in country, and that while he lked and thought, his face con- cted in such grim contortions t on one occasion a pair of oxen k fright. People want to know t Beethoven was suspicious of the world, that he accused nds who were devoted to him of withholding money that was his, yet that he was capable of most unselfish and gracious deeds of friendship; that he could not shave himself without inflicting on his face nicks and cuts, so clumsy was he; that he never understood the multiplication table; that his letters were dreadfully misspelled, yet were often pieces of beautiful and unself-conscious writing; that he could behave like a boor but that there was also a sweetness in him which prompted him, when he learned the news that a child of one of his friends had died, to go to his friend's house, enter the room, say nothing, but sit down at the piano and play for hours improvised music of solace.

People want to know that Wagner read his librettos aloud to his friends, whom he summoned to these reading sessions; that no friend could deny such a summons lest Wagner boil with rage; that Wagner, who conceived art in terms of the Folk, the simple people and their legend, personally needed clothing of silk and satin, used perfume, and sipped champagne while he composed, and that he preferred to do his work in a room heavily draped and curtained, with all the windows closed; and that he felt a man of his genius ought to be supported by public funds or private donations. He was indeed so desperately in need of large sums of money that he once toyed with the idea (perhaps not too seriously) of marrying a wealthy widow for her dowry. In his art, however, he was unwilling to make the slightest compromise; he re-

Partners for life— your carpets and Spongex

Even a carpet needs a partner... for a better, longer life. No rug can stand the shock of wearing footsteps by itself and give half the wear it should. Spongex, the sponge rubber rug cushion, gives rugs more than twice the life they normally would have. Yet, Spongex itself stays fresh and resilient year after year under carpet after carpet.

It's amazing how different carpets feel when cushioned on Spongex. They're luxuriously soft, yet lively to walk on. With Spongex you enjoy the finest in comfort for a lifetime of footsteps.

You'll love the way Spongex helps keep your floors and carpets clean. It has no hairs and fibers to spread about—is easily vacuumed or damp-wiped—is moth and vermin proof—non-allergenic, too. Always a cushion, it never mats down.

You can identify Spongex by its gray and green marbleized coloring. Free sample of Spongex available upon request.

ELY CULBERTSON
Canasta Shuffler

Ely Culbertson says..."This Mechanical Shuffler is an outstanding addition to the science and pleasure of the game of Canasta," but that's an understatement for this gem of his. It's a Samba Shuffler especially—that is, it shuffles perfectly 1, 2, or 3 decks at a time, and it can't possibly spill, mutilate, or bend the cards. Just load and turn the crank for a carefree shuffle every time. This handsome enamel finished unit folds into a compact box for storage $5.95

Heirlooms of Tomorrow

Typical of the era of gracious living in the old South, like the mark "sterling" is to silver, Craftique reproductions are much more than authentic copies of antiques. Each piece is made from the same solid Honduras mahogany and constructed with the same cabinet craftsmanship and attention to minute detail, as were the originals. Although originally used in large rooms their grace and proportions adapt themselves perfectly for today's living.

That you can enjoy Today

Because of their design and character, Craftique reproductions combi both dining and living room atmosphere that is perfect for the combin tion, or alcove dining arrangements. Every piece has both practical u and decorative charm in living room, library, hall, as well as dining roo Available either in antique satin finished mahogany or the honey ton MELLOWAX finish on mahogany which blends with contempora and modern settings. Since the quality and design of these true r productions never change, a modest selection can always be adde to in later years.

LOOK! Amazing New Gem Discovery!

It's More Brilliant Than a Diamond!

Only an Expert Can Tell the Difference

Write today for the FREE illustrated booklet that tells the full story of the latest miracle of science—the story of a glorious jewel discovered in the laboratories of one of the world's largest corporations. Read about the Kenya Gem—a true gem crystallized by science instead of nature—a gem that so closely resembles a diamond that only an expert can tell the difference.

More Fire! More Brilliance!

This marvelous gem has more brilliance, more fire and a more dazzling display of color than the finest diamond and yet it costs only 1/30th as much as a diamond of equal size. The Kenya Gem is actually more brilliant than a diamond; jewelers and gem experts will tell you that its refractive qualities (2.62 as against 2.42 for the diamond) make the Kenya Gem unsurpassed for beauty and brilliance. ITS BEAUTY AND BRILLIANCE ARE PERMANENT.

The longer you wear and enjoy your Kenya Gem or Kenya Gem jewelry the more you are impressed and delighted with it. Many qualified experts find it difficult to tell the difference between this astonishing new gem discovery and a diamond . . . yet a Kenya Gem sells for only $27 a carat, whereas a high-grade diamond sells for $900 to $1500 a carat.

Here is just one of hundreds of letters we have received . . . a commercial photographer from Texas writes: "I was indeed surprised and delighted when it arrived. Being a Commercial Photographer, I have photographed hundreds of diamonds for reproduction in advertising. I can truthfully say I have never seen a diamond to equal the fire and brilliance of the Kenya stone much less the beautiful color."

Costs Only $27 a Carat!

You can now own a brilliant, unmounted large Kenya Gem for only $27 (1 carat) to $120 (4 carats); also men's distinctive rings and ladies' fashionable rings, earrings and pendants of 14K white or yellow gold set with expertly cut Kenya Gems.

BUY ON EASY PAYMENTS IF YOU WISH!

The Cinderella of Science

Kenya Gems are the sensational discovery that you read about in READER'S DIGEST, TIME, THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, and many other well-known magazines, "the only thing on earth more brilliant than a diamond." Read the amazing story of this wonderful discovery for yourself, and actual photographs of Kenya Gems in many beautifully styled 14K gold mountings. Mail the FREE coupon today!

Positive Money Back Guarantee

In our FREE booklet you will read all about the most sweeping, most liberal guarantee ever made on fine gems. Every Kenya Gem and piece of Kenya Gem jewelry is sold with a definite 30-day money-back return privilege. If, when you have examined it and worn it, you are not completely delighted, simply return it and all money you have paid us will be refunded to you promptly.

OIL-O-MATIC

Metered Low Pressure

★ SAVES SERVICE DOLLARS ★ OUTLASTS MOST BURNERS 2 TO 1 ★ CUTS FUEL BILLS 3 BIG WAYS!

1 Burns the New, Rich Higher Heat-Unit Oils!

New catalytic fuel oils are now available—rich, heavy oil with more heat energy. The ordinary burner just can't handle these new oils without frequent service calls—yet OIL-O-MATIC burns them with ease. You get MORE heat per dollar!

2 Thriftily Meters Oil Drop by D-R-O-P!

No more uncontrolled oil flow . . . wasted fuel. Oil-O-Matic's exclusive "Thrift Meter" actually METERS the oil, drop by tiny drop, measures it inside the burner. You use only the exact amount of oil NEEDED to keep your home in comfort!

3 Double-Blends Air and Oil for Hotter, Cleaner Flame!

Metered air inside the nozzle whips heavy oil to a frothy oil-air mist that burns cleanly, completely. Measured air outside the nozzle BOOSTS the flame to a ball of fire, wringing every bit of heat from every drop of oil. Only Oil-O-Matic employs this metered double-blending process.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By Julie Polshek

The title The Cocktail Hour doesn't begin to do credit to the wondrous food recipes you'll find between the covers of Louis DeGouy's fascinating food-and-drink book. True, its title and its jacket mentions that you'll find recipes for savory tidbits and appetizers along with recipes for the drinks themselves. But, because the French conception of the hors d'oeuvre is so infinitely different and broader than our own, you're completely unprepared for the fabulous scope of the 653-recipe food chapters until you read their introduction. It's like finding the "surprise" in a box of Cracker Jack in days gone by. In French cuisine, the hors d'oeuvres are a collection of small dishes served at the table at the start of the meal, and usually of the fork-and-knife variety. Hence, you'll find in the chapter, "Appetizers and Savory Cocktail Snacks," not only a treasure-trove of recipes for canapes, relishes, hot and cold snacks per se, but also an equal wealth of recipes for exotic fork-and-knife concoctions. Swiss cheese croquettes, sweetbread in oyster shells, an oven-baked risotto are only a few of the masterful DeGuoy creations that are as fitting for luncheon, buffet suppers, high tea, or a lavish smörgåsbord as for "the cocktail hour." The chapter "Cocktail Appetizers" is no less surprising or far-flung. It runs the gamut of first-course cocktails; fruit, vegetable, seafood, juices, frappés.

If you're as chef-minded as I am, you'll find yourself browsing through the food section page by page before the 650-recipe beverage section gets its just due. It, too, proves to be a st galaxy. Not just hosts for well-known drinks equal number for such concoctions as crustas, cobblers, cups, glamorot by the dozen, slings. EXCLUSIVE Shadow Blend Designs

YEARS LONGER Weather Protection

So much depends on the roof you choose for your home—fire-safety, beauty, weather protection . . .

That's why you should see Carey Fire-Chex Shingles before you decide on any roofing—for the home you plan or live in now. Fire-Chex, made of patented asbestos-plastic, are the only shingles ever rated CLASS A† by Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc. This is the highest fire-protective rating any roofing material can earn!

Carey Fire-Chex will give your roof enchanting beauty, too! Choose from these rich, distinguished and exclusive new shadow blend designs, copyrighted as "works of art"—or from these beautiful solid colors.

Of course, a roof isn't worth its salt unless it gives lasting weather protection. Tests, in regions of greatest weather severity, prove that extra-heavy Fire-Chex won't crack, warp or curl . . . resist rain, snow, sleet, wind and hail long after ordinary shingles must be replaced. Thus, Fire-Chex cost less per year of service!

Remember, Fire-Chex asbestos-plastic shingles are made only by Carey. They have no equal, anywhere, for permanent fire-safety, beauty and weather-protection! Your architect, builder or Carey dealer will gladly show you how Fire-Chex fit your plans to build or remodel.

With all his doubts and his in himself completely. He not always be sure of what be doing it. Fulfillment as in as the grass pushing through the ground is the artist's natural urge. To get there, he is capable of performing an amount of work—to say nothing of the depth of thinking and feeling which goes into the work—that is staggeringly impressive. I have before me the facsimile edition of the full score of the Meistersinger. I have owned the book for years, but each time I look at it, I am awed by the amount of work that was required merely to write down the number of notes contained in its 462 pages, to say nothing of the creation of the melodies, the construction of the design, the conception of plot and character, the working out of the orchestration, etc., etc. Yet Wagner was a sick man. He was plagued with frequent attacks of erysipelas and, judged by ordinary "human" standards, would have had every excuse not to finish one-tenth of the work that he did finish. As a matter of fact, the plan for the Meistersinger was conceived in Marienbad, a watering place where he had gone to try to find relief from his ailment. What really gave him relief was the new work. He returned healthier, not because he had imbibed the curative waters, but because he had "hatched" a new project.

THE passion for work distinguishes the professional from the amateur. The summer painter and the sunshine author put off their work because they "do not have time" or they do not feel "inspired." The real creative mind can accept no such delay.

I think that this single purpose is characteristic also of the lesser artist. I have just finished the new book, Mary Garden's Story, by Mary Garden and Louis Biancolli. In spite of occasional coquettishness, here is an honest, sensible, shrewd autobiography. Now, Mary Garden certainly led as varied and tumultuous a life as any one could wish for. And she was by no means a one-sided or poorly educated woman. She read, she traveled, she knew something about painting. But all this, as well as her romantic life, amounted to very little. Very little, compared to the drive to sing and act. Discussing her own coldness with men, her lack of real response to sex, she says: "Nobody ever took me from my work, not a man who lived. That was my life and my passion, my work. That's what I really lived with. It wasn't any individual: it was my work that made me live."

But Masland's "El Pueblo" carpet is one of the happy exceptions. The design is borrowed from a traditional Navajo pattern—borrowed and condensed into a kind of miniature version of the big bold designs on Indian rugs. You can get it in two or three tone-on-tone colorings, but I like it best in the "multi-color" which merely gives the effect of a subtle tone-on-tone variation it's on the floor. Lightolier in quest of something simple and elegant to go on Mrs. Windham's priceless Chinese chest. To me, alabaster has always been the ultimate in romantic materials. Seems to suggest the precious cargoes of all the adventurous vessels of history from the triremes of Tyre to the racy clipper ships of Salem. But nobody can say it is not as practical as today's plastics. And for lighting it has a special virtue, since it seems to appropriate any beams that are straying around and give them out again in a luminous glow. Tempestini has designed a whole group of alabaster lamp bases for Lightolier, all of them in flowing sculptured shapes. I picked one of th plest—a tear drop, pierce two holes, mounted on a wood base, and shaded with polyplastic. thing you've always had to struggle to have custom-made. My favorite solution for too-small foyers is a banquette that may now be bought in a "package" from Fabry Associates. The combination consists of a webbed-seat bench (24, 48, or 72 inches long), seat cushions, back cushions to hang on the wall, and a set of wooden knobs to hang them from. Cushions come in muslin, so you can cover them as you please. Hardly comfortable enough for an evening of television. But in a hallway, a banquette makes a handy place to sit while putting on your rubbers and they're good for children's rooms where too many chairs cut down on play space, and nobody sits for very long on anything but the floor.

By Louisa M. Comstock

Even if you follow the conventional tourist routine in Nevada's famous ghost town, Virginia City, you'll get a thorough if somewhat romanticized briefing on what it was all about. Here is the familiar main street, weathered now, buckling a bit, but still worthy of the better Hollywood westerns. Here is the old Bucket of Blood, its mahogany bar and crystal chandeliers intact, more museum than saloon these days and perhaps better so. In the old Piper Opera House you can, perhaps, envision the bonanza kings of yore applauding such stars as Langtry, Modjeska, Booth, while a young cub reporter named Mark Twain tried his hand at dramatic criticism. In Graves Castle you get a good idea of what easy money and a hard life can do to a man's conception of "home." And here, and here, and here, marked by signs, were the old mines, from which came fortunes in gold and silver adding up to at least $750,000,000.

But Virginia City today has more than immediately meets the eye. A Restoration Project is tenderly but very gradually making restoration, faithful even (Continued on page 134)

3 tricks for getting more house for your money

Getting the most for your home-building dollar is trickier than any of us like to admit. It is just as hard to spend properly a lot of money as a little. Perhaps even harder.

The trick is to state the problem—to define all your needs so precisely and completely that the solution becomes clear and inevitable. But this is not easy. It requires a knowledge of self, plus an understanding of the best concepts of good living in our time. Both are elusive goals. But thousands of families achieve them and their houses are great successes.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL shows you three such successes in this issue. They can throw light on your own problems—IF you fall into any of these categories:

1 if you can afford what you want.

2 if you have to have a house quickly.

3 if you can take the time to build it yourself.

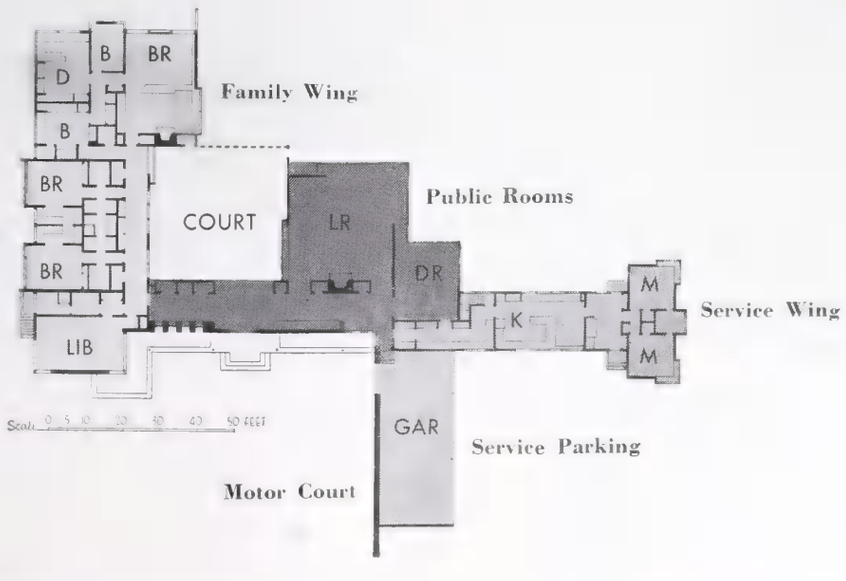
NO. 1 HOW TO GET MORE HOUSE FOR YOUR MONEY



-if you can afford what you want

By Jean Murray Bangs

It is commonly believed that the only requirement for building the completely perfect house is a sufficiency of funds. This is quite erroneous. The true secret to achieving a high level of perfection is to understand what a perfect house means in terms of the most highly developed conveniences, comforts, beauties, amenities, and personal indulgences. A knowledge of such high perfection is not inborn. Rather it is acquired—by self-analysis, by seeing other examples of perfection, by daily practice in the arts of good living, and by knowing how to hire the best professional designing talents to execute one's aims.

On these next 12 pages we take you through such a perfect house, from motor court to swimming pool, and analyze for you the subtle values which make it rank far above most houses where money was no object. Follow us, please, as we drive into the motor court, at left. Your car pulls up in front of a masterpiece of a stone wall, which is apparently the back of a three-car garage.

What you see from the motor court

You see a low, unpretentious but definitely dignified house. Only the size of the structure, the quality of material and design give the faintest hint that this house might be exceptional. And this hint is apparent only to the practiced eye.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur O. Hanisch, owners

Inside is another world—coolness, serenity

You suddenly realize that wall in front of house is really a well-bred barrier. Without being too obvious about it, this wall enables the owner to withdraw from the outside world of people, and from the outside climate.

Everywhere, you get an effect of openness

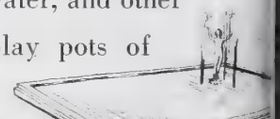
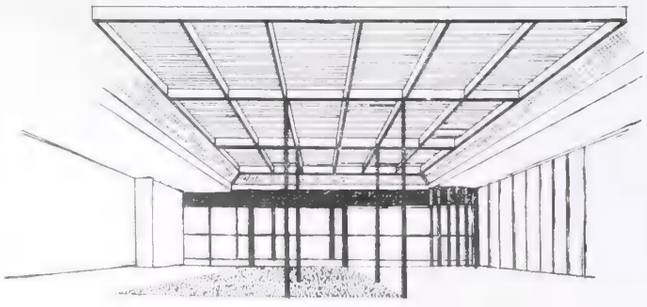
Just inside the front door, a wide loggia stretches to your left and right. Straight ahead, with no visible barrier between you and it, is a large courtyard. You are not sure whether it is an indoor or outdoor room. Across the court, you look into a large living room. No matter where you look you get an effect of great openness.



The effect is soothing to the eyes



Because the flooring and ceiling materials flow on beyond what seem to be tracks of sliding walls, you sense that here is some new interrelation between indoors and outdoors of a kind you have never seen before. Something has produced different light conditions—soft, filtered, but still outdoor light.

Here is a new kind of outdoor ro
—for privacy and withdrawal

From the hush of the front hall you look out into a room of cool shadow and filtered sunlight. There is a sour of falling water. This house not onl looks cool and feels cool. It IS cool. the senses are satisfied. There is an triguing pattern on the floor—a patter made by shadows and sunlight and gr grass. You notice that an intriguing kind of light is created by trellis parasol for the rooms around this courtyard. For are lighted, from the court side, by a low-intensity, from-above light. Whereas ordinary rooms, with window glass walls, have more direct, less diffused light.

New subtleties about good living

Once you understand how the courtyard relates to the rooms around it, you become more delighted with the exhibition of skills which the house presents. For the hall now comes to life as an indoor room which seems to belong to the outside. The court is an outdoor room which partakes of the quality of an indoor one. But both subtly prepare your mind for the living room, which is entirely an indoor one. You begin to feel that owner, architect, landscape designer, decorator—and even you, the observer—are all sophisticated persons.

Whimsey and functionalism

Three concrete "mushroom" tables stand always ready in this screened outdoor court to receive displays of blooming pots. By limiting flower display to such a small area, the Hanisches can always be sure of super showmanship. Even when bare of flowers, these stands look like agreeable furniture.

You will have to buy a ready-built house in a developmen

Here is a good example to use as a standard to shop agains

If you have to have a house quickly (continued)

Flexibility of plan is almost as valuable an asset as the actual amount of enclosed space, since a house you can't change freezes your pattern of living. This house has a storage wall on rollers which can be used to add or subtract a room. When in the position above, it increases size of living room by 88 sq. ft. When swung out at right angles to outside wall as at right, it creates a third bedroom or study. Half of storage space is accessible from each side.

Seventy-five to 80 per cent of the houses in this country are built by operative builders. And that's no accident. There are certain advantages to buying a ready-built house which hold, whether the house itself is good, bad, or indifferent. You can get it quickly. It will be complete. You don't have to bother with financing because it has already been arranged and made available in a "package." You don't have to worry about the terms of dozens of separate contracts. All you have to do is pay your money and sign on the dotted line. And you see what you get.

But like most short-cuts, this method of getting a house has its drawbacks. Since a development house is designed to meet average requirements, it is extremely unlikely that any one house will be just the ticket for your particular requirements. In addition, you are likely to be confronted with regimented design, lack of imagination and good sense in site planning, and, frequently, inadequate facilities for transportation, schools, shopping.

To buy a house quickly is not, as a rule, the best way to get the most house for your money. Nevertheless, good values in ready-built houses can be found if you know how to shop for them. This house in Fairfax County, Virginia, which sells for $13,750 on a 10,000-square-foot lot, is an excellent example. There may not be one like it in your locality, but we show it to you as a standard of value. Study the features that make it an exceptional buy in today's market, and you will learn what to shop for if you must buy a development house.

The luxury of our time is space, enclosed space, and that is the first thing to look for. Porches, patios, terraces, landscaping, you will certainly want. But these can be added at any time, at a cost that is small indeed compared to today's cost for basic shelter. The number of square feet of enclosed space you will have to move around in is all-important. Think in terms of space rather than in number of rooms.

This house contains 873 square feet, not counting the carport, and the 32 square feet of enclosed storage at the back of the carport (a highly essential item in a house with neither basement nor attic). Considering the fact that building costs in the Washington area are as high as any in the country, this is a lot of house for the money. (Continued on page 164)

NO. 3 HOW TO GET MORE HOUSE FOR YOUR MONEY

-if you can take the time to build it yourself

By William S. Hinn

You can get a $40,000 house for less than $16,000. But you'll have to make sacrifices. Here is the story of a couple who did it, in Westport, Conn., and found the rewards outweighed the temporary hardships

It's perfectly true. You can get twice as much house for your money if you build it yourself. But while you're building it, you're likely to find yourself sleeping on the floor and eating like a paratrooper on active duty. Your family will huddle behind windows hung with tar paper when it rains, and you'll follow an unwritten schedule for using a bathroom without a door. You will probably live in squalor for at least a year, more likely two, and possibly three.

But there are many kinds of squalor. Our only alternative was squalor, too—living in a one-room apartment with two children and three dogs. After seven months of that kind of constraint. our half-finished house seemed like a spacious palace, littered as it was with a variety of foreign objects (Continued on page 108)

Next year, it will look like this

While the Hinns slept on the floor and cooked on one burner in their unfinished house (top), a mental picture of their future home (above) sustained their spirits. They looked forward to the comforts of a modern house, with large areas of native stone to give it the special flavor of the Connecticut countryside.

Flagstone paving of terrace extends through a large section of house, closely relating indoors to outdoors. Interior walls of stone separate living room from master bedroom, and dining area from hall. Since house was designed to follow natural slope of site, section at top of plan is two steps higher than the rest.

from rolls of insulation to workman's old shoes. At that time the house was not yet completely enclosed.

It's two years now since we started to build. We've been living in our house for one year. And we figure it will be another four months before we can say it's finished.

But right now we have space. We have privacy. We have a plan that functions well for the way we like to live, and a house that's easy to take care of. Best of all, we have managed to get the house we really wanted for the price we could afford to pay. The bills now total a little over $15,000. For that sum—plus an incalculable amount of our own time and labor—we built a house of 2,300 square-foot floor area that was estimated by the lowest bidder to cost $40,000. (That means our cost was $6.50 a square foot compared to the contractor's price of $17.40 a square foot.)

It took a real crisis to pitch us into the project of building the house ourselves. For eight years we had been living more or less contentedly in a quaint antique which was the only house we could find to rent when I was called east from Chicago to take a war job. We were somewhat less than contented with the fact that the sofa in our cellarless living room was always just a little clammy to sit on, and water actually came in under the front door (Continued on page 110)

when it rained. But we put up with it, as best we could.

Meanwhile, we talked a lot about the house we wanted to build. For at least seven years I had been designing the house. We were blissfully unaware of the fact that it would cost more than twice as much as we could possibly afford.

The figure we had in mind was around $12.000 to $14.000. When I first showed perspective sketches to contractors, they estimated that that sum would build half the house we planned—that is the house you see on page 107 minus two bedrooms and one bath. But when I started to work out the details, it was even more discouraging. One man wanted $3,000 just to build the fieldstone fireplace wall in the living room. Obviously, our budget couldn't cope with prices like that. And the estimates kept going higher all the time. So I sat on our clammy sofa and started to play with the idea of being my own contractor and doing the carpentry myself.

Then came the news that the owner of our rented house had decided to sell, and we would have to move. So we moved into that one-room apartment. And then we knew we would have to build our own house, or else. (Continued on page 166)

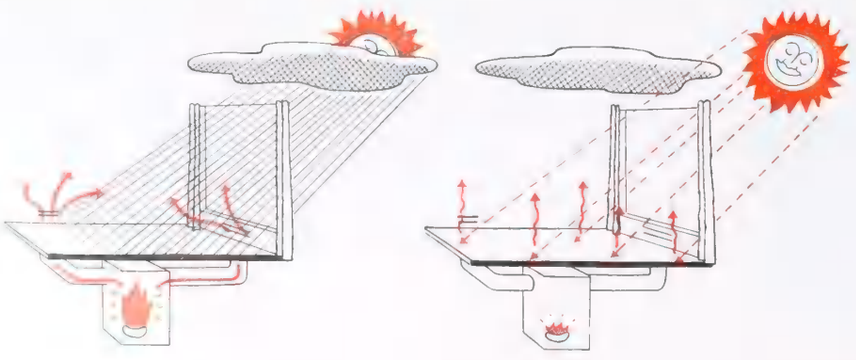
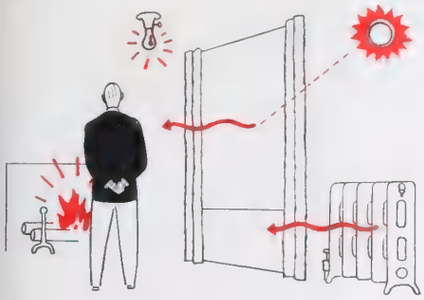
WATCH YOUR HOUSE



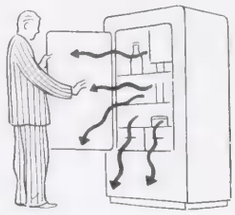
By Wolfgang Langewiesche

So you want to build a house someday—a good house! People will tell you that it can't be done. Nobody, they say, builds his first house right. You have to make your mistakes, they say, like everybody else; and then learn from them; and then build another house and learn again. And maybe on the third try . . .



Rather expensive. Time consuming, too! But there is a better way. Why not learn from other people's mistakes? Why not watch your present abode as well as other people's houses, and find out how they work?

A house—work? Yes. That is the key idea. A house is not just something that sits there and looks pretty. A house is a machine for converting outdoor climate into indoor climate. Of course, it must also look nice and keep the burglars out, and it must be convenient to keep clean, and it must last a while. But its main job is to give you a decent indoor climate.



A house must keep you warm on winter mornings, cool on summer afternoons. It must give you light, but not glare. It must keep the air humid, but not dank. It must keep the wind out, but not be stuffy. It must give you a breeze in summer, but not let the curtains flap and the papers blow. It must drink in all possible sunshine in winter; it must reject most sunshine in summer. It must be comfortable at the same time for men who wear heavy clothes and for women who wear light ones: for grandchildren who romp and grandparents who sit still. It must let you look out, but must keep other people from looking in. It must let the air in, but keep out noise, dust, bugs, and drafts. It must make you feel nice and protected. The old cave stuff—but not walled in. It must blend indoors and outdoors together, but still maintain, most of the year, a big difference between indoors and outdoors.

All this is a hard job. Most houses do it poorly. Most of the serious mistakes made in building are made on this score. Why not study these mistakes and learn? It's the best thing you can possibly do, right now, to prepare for building your own house later on. It's a thing you can do wherever you happen to be—in a rented apartment, or in the houses of friends, in hotels, railway stations, airplane cabins, automobiles, tents, mines, submarines or jails—any kind of enclosed space. It's easy to do. Simply ask yourself: "Why am I not comfortable here? What—I mean exactly what—bothers me?" Do that for a few weeks, and you'll double your understanding of houses.

How to "COOK" WITHOUT HEAT

HEAT IS NOT THE ONLY METHOD OF BREAKING DOWN FOOD TO MAKE IT DIGESTIBLE. THE BLENDER "COOKS" BY BREAKING DOWN FOOD MECHANICALLY

By Jean Harris

With the coming of the blender, a revolution is beginning to occur in our cooking habits and recipes. The blender adds a new process —blending—to the bag of food preparation techniques that we already know. But it also does easily many types of work that have been too laborious or too time-consuming heretofore.

For instance, it grinds coffee, aerates orange juice, makes special flour, powders sugar, mixes batters, whips cream, beats eggs, or chops nuts. It also blends, mixes, grinds, chops, pulverizes, and shreds. No one piece of kitchen equipment has ever been able to do all this. All this saves time and energy.

The significance of the blender lies in the fact that it brings the power machinery of the factory into the kitchen. The form in which our food finally reaches the table depends as much on the tools used in preparing it as on the foodstuff itself. For example, boiled dishes could not be created until the invention of the pot. Baked dishes were not invented until the creation of the oven.

The blender is a machine which comes bringing gifts of its own: new forms of food like blended raw fruits, and vegetables homogenized with a liquid base. Another such new food is uncooked apple, comminuted in the blender until it looks like apple butter but tastes fresh like cider. So are the blended fruit purées which merge the flavor of the whole fruit—(skin, seeds, and pulp) because all of these can be put through the blender—not just the pulp alone. Or you can merge the flavors of several fruits.

But to think of the blender merely as a labor-saver gives a very poor notion of what it can do. To get the most out of machinery you must think not of the old chores the machine will do better, but of the new jobs it will do. (Most of the good things in our life today are the gifts of machines properly used.)

These services point to a whole new cookery and recipe development. Ever since the invention of fire we have known about cooking with heat. The mechanical refrigerator and the home freezer have taught us how to "cook with cold." The blender adds still another method—"cooking with mechanical change." The food which results is practically a new thing.

This principle—of using mechanical change instead of, or combined with, heat—has been known for hundreds of years. It has been used primarily to save heat. The Chinese cut food into tiny pieces before it reaches the stove to enable them to cook quickly and save precious fuel. Many people pound and mince, which soften tissues of tough meat almost as much as heat does. That is why chopped meat, no matter how tough the piece of beef, is cooked quickly just like a tender cut.

Even though the blender has been with us for several years, we have needed time to get acquainted with what it fully means. It invests cooking with an interest and excitement which was not possible when slow, mechanical hand labor deterred you at every turn.

The blender typifies the exciting opportunities inherent in cooking in this decade. You can enter the kitchen on any level you wish. Prepared and frozen foods let you operate on the level of the lady with practically no work, no responsibility, and no thought. You do not need to crush your dress, muss your hair, soil your hands, or use your mind. But if you want something more exciting, if you want to try and contribute something to the world, and have fun doing it, the blender lets you operate in the kitchen in the role of inventor. This means operating at a very high level.

For now, with the introduction of such a power tool into the kitchen, the housewife has been given the means which will enable her to become creative with the foodstuffs of today. Too many people think that inventiveness in cookery consists of decorating foods—making flowers out of raw beets, for example. The blender offers other, more rewarding goals. It fairly screams at us to use it, not for decoration, but to diversify the forms and combinations of food.

This need to diversify our food comes from the fact that our food inheritance is from people to whom starch was the staple food. (See "Fruits," HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, August 1951.) This meant that flour got into our food in all sorts of imperceptible ways. (Continued on page 182)

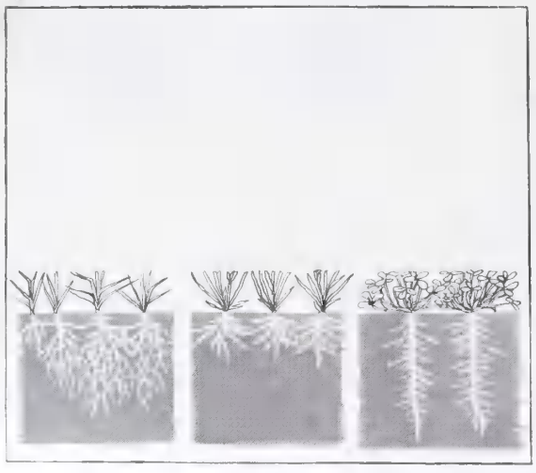
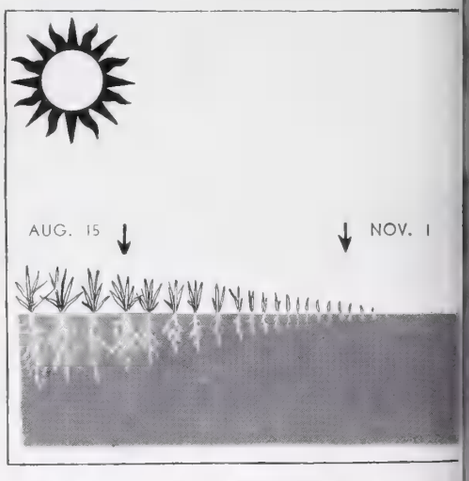
DID SUMMER

Here's what to do if your lawn is worth saving—



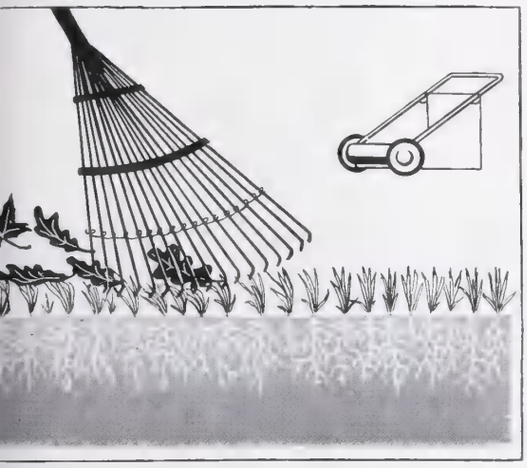
Feed twice this fall to restore vigor and cut down on weeds next year. Lawn grasses thrive best in cool weather, so make good use of the extra food now. Weeds, though, make little growth once hot weather passes. Make each application of plant food at the rate recommended as normal—usually four pounds per 100 square feet.

Amount of clippings determines when you can stop mowing this year. Continue to mow at normal 1½-inch height as long as you get any appreciable amount of clippings. Many people stop too soon. Result: tangled mat of grass that smothers the plants during the winter. Danger is acute where winter ice storms are common.



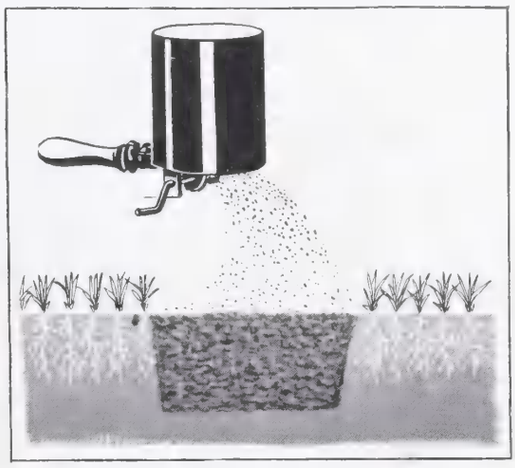
If you must re-seed—

The kind of grass to use depends upon how much good soil you have. Kentucky bluegrass produces a big mass of roots—needs a rich soil. Fescue (center) survives in shallow, poor soil, so is first choice for sandy places. Clover (right) sends its roots deep into the ground—as much as six feet— so can suck up water and stay green during scorching droughts.



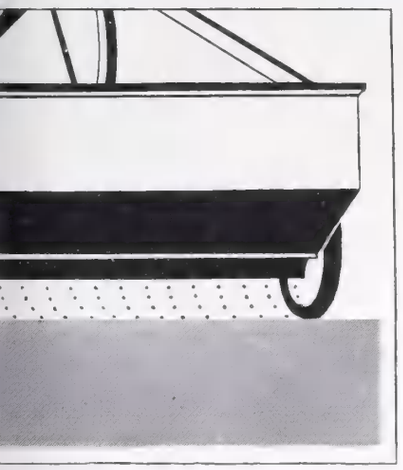
Test the soil and add lime as needed to sweeten it. Mix in complete plant food generously, especially if there are trees to compete with the grass. Seedbed should be 4 inches of well-worked soil. Lawns are permanent investments, so don't skimp.

Sow the seed as early in the fall as possible Sketch shows how delay in seeding sacrifices both top and root growth. Tiny grass plants from late seedings lack an adequate root anchorage to get them through the winter. August 15 is the best date for northern half o country. November 1 is final date—and risky.

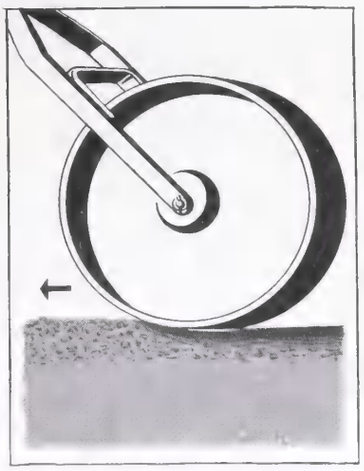


RUIN YOUR LAWN?

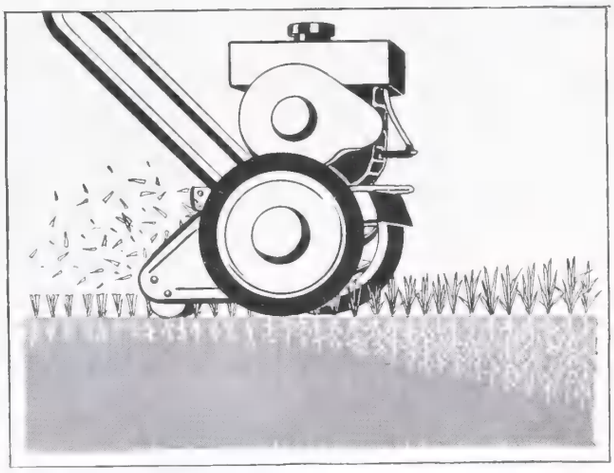
s on the lawn do no harm until they start to mat , so you can wait until they are all off the trees. whisk them up with a sweeping motion to avoid g the grass plants out by the roots. Or use one new mechanical lawn sweepers you merely push.



Spray weeds now with a chemical killer. Since the weeds aren't growing actively at this time of year, double the strength of spray.



Bare spots in lawn need to be spaded and raked carefully, then reseeded. Avoid natural tendency to use too much seed by relying on a mechanical seeder. Soak soil 4 inches deep every week if weather remains dry.



SKETCHES BY JOHN BRIMER

seed sparingly or grass plants will choke each other in the scramble ood and water. One pound of good is plenty for 500 square feet of Each grass plant then has room to unshine and a place for its roots.

Roll the new seeding just once. This presses the soil tightly around the seed, so insures that they will sprout quickly. Over-rolling ruins the de-sired crumbly texture of the soil.

Start mowing when the grass gets 2 inches high. Cut to 1½ inches. Mow as often as needed, but never cut closer than this. The 1½-inch height allows for ample leaf growth to build quickly an ever-deepening root system. Such a lawn will be ready to grow luxuriantly next spring and to stay green all summer.

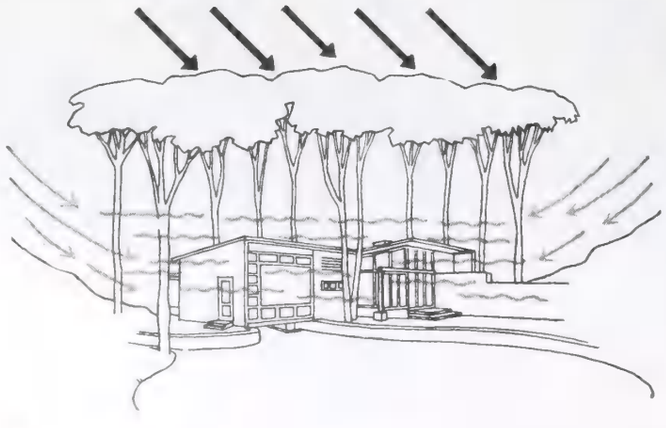
HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S CLIMATE CONTROL PROJECT

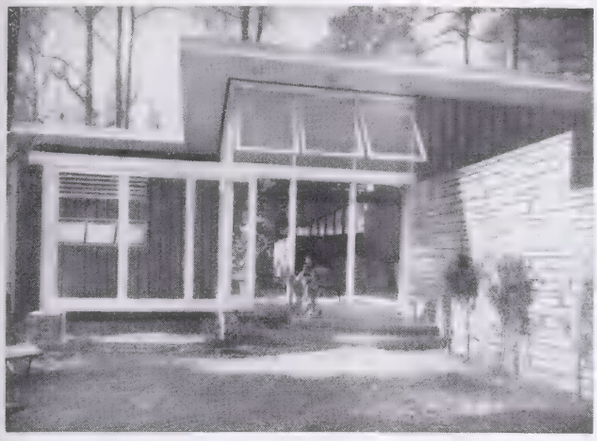


How to Live at the Comfort Line

This Georgia house shows you how to get the most comfort out of a climate with too much hot weather

If you live in hot and humid Dixie, read this:

Typical weather for Macon and much of the South gives you seven months of high temperatures, way above the comfort line. So you spend much time and energy getting rid of excess heat.



To keep cool, build your house in a shady hollow. Trees will shade lot, cooling air layer nearest ground. This air flows downhill, collects in hollow, submerges you in pool of coolness.

It depends upon where you live. If it's north of the Mason-Dixon line, your main comfort problem is surplus cold. Generally speaking, more heat is what you're after. And a house and garden really well designed for your climate will use every device, man-made and natural, to raise your indoor temperatures up to the Comfort Line—70°-72°. But if you live in Dixie, like the Bernard A. Webbs, of Macon, Georgia, your problem is reversed. As a rule, you've too much heat for too much of the year. So the main emphasis in the southern house should be on holding inside temperatures down to the Comfort Line.

This typical Dixie problem confronted Architect Webb in designing his own house. In Macon, as you can see from the chart at left, maximum temperatures rise above the Comfort Line daily for seven months. In the four hottest months, even the lowest temperatures hover around the seventies. These temperatures are from Macon's Weather Bureau, but there are much cooler spots in town. The Webbs bought one of those spots and built themselves a house on it. Thanks to their location alone, they have cooler summers than most of their fellow townsmen.

You may ask: Why is their lot any cooler than the next one? The answer lies in a well-known meteorological fact. In any small, bowl-shaped valley, covered with tall trees, the sun never hits the ground. Thus the earth stays cool and, in turn, cools a thin layer of air nearest it. This cool air drains downhill and collects in a pool at the bottom, just like water. The result is what the farmer calls a "frost-pocket." In northern climates this is a hazard. In Macon it's a blessing because it means cooler summers. To see how cleverly the Webbs made this natural asset work for them, study the next seven pages.

To catch cool air, living-room doors roll out on overhead tracks, just like the doors on old-fashioned barns.

Looking southeast across little pond and woodland, you can see how tall, deciduous trees give the Webb living room its full share of winter sun. Yet in summer their high, loose shade will cut out glare, prevent house from heating up.

A little woodland stream has been dammed to create pool, over and around which house is built. Besides giving whole house an engaging center of attraction, this pool has a stabilizing effect on climate immediately around it—keeping house cooler in summer, warmer in winter.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The dining room and bamboo-walled patio beyond it get afternoon sun in winter. But big deciduous trees, carefully preserved during construction, throw an umbrella of leafy shade over entire area all summer.

The plot on which the Webbs built their Macon house was not considered very desirable because it was "way below the road." Yet, in addition to having the best summer climate in town, the land had fine trees, privacy from the street, permanent protection of a city park along south and west, and a little brook down the center. Architect Webb has turned all these "natural resources" to good advantage. If you study the plot plan below, you'll see that he chose to build at the bottom of the valley some 48 feet below street level, because the balmy Macon winters raised no problems of ice or snow on the driveway. And though the "frost-pocket" effect at the valley floor meant colder winters as well as cooler summers, over-all winter temperatures are generally above freezing.

By damming the brook, Webb accomplished several things at one stroke. The little pond gives his whole house a center of interest which he has exploited by placement of windows. But the pond is also a comfort device, since any body of water has a stabilizing effect on its immediate environs, keeping it cooler in summer, warmer in winter. Hence, windows which open onto the pool admit cooler air in summer and a more pleasant outlook year round than if the pool were not there.

Looking down on the house from street-side slope, you can see how it nestles on valley floor, turning its back on northwest and motor court.

If you have an idea that all small houses must have a pinched and meager look, study this one. At the present time, it consists of four rooms, none of them regally large. Yet, thanks to its open plan, big glass areas and easy, low-keyed color, the Webb house has the air of a much larger structure. Nor was it an expensive house: it cost $9.37 per sq. ft. in 1949. Of course, this price includes certain economies which most people couldn't duplicate, since Mr. Webb was his own architect and builder. And prices have gone up since. Nevertheless, the house has many features, both structural and decorative, which give big-house looks on a small-house budget. See, for example, how simple forms of houses are enriched by the use of rough-textured materials like pine, slate, and brick. (Continued on page 127)

The Webbs sleep with the sound of running water, since their bedroom is over the dam. This bridge room will become flower-filled passage when new bedroom wing is added at left.

Freedom from clutter is guaranteed by numerous low cabinets one each side of bed and along window wall. Ceiling-high wardrobes are built into hall (right) behind sliding doors of striated plywood.

A sure sign of good, small-house design is knowing where to be lavish with the space you can afford and where to skimp on it. In the Webb house, this policy shows up with telling effect in the bedroom. Fairly large to begin with (13′ x 17′), its spaciousness is greatly increased by a high sloping ceiling, glass walls on facing sides and low, built-in furniture.

On a summer night, air in the Webbs's valley may easily be 10 degrees cooler than that on the hills around them. But such air may still not be cool enough for comfort—unless it is moving. To guarantee this, Webb has wisely placed a big attic fan in the ceiling of the bedroom hall (right). This fan guarantees air movement by pulling cool air in through low windows, exhausting heated house air through roof.

House Beautiful's Party Editor

Mike is checking on his baked spareribs. Fourteen is none too soon to learn about cooking.

"Mom, our Junior Assembly Dance is next Friday night, so may I have company for dinner before the party?" asked Mike on Monday morning.

As I was trying to pull myself together for a show of enthusiasm and willing co-operation, Mike plowed ahead with "And, Mom, I'll help all I can and do the marketing, and set the table and everything!" I answered with as much enthusiasm as I could muster for Monday A.M. "Certainly. How many guests do you want?"

"We'll need two boys for the little wimmin (his sisters Sue and Shannah), and I would like to ask—er—Linda." Did I detect a faint tinge of red on his face, and was this why Mike Stanton was getting party-conscious? But whatever the reason, it was all right with me. For we think this is an excellent way of teaching manners, and developing a feeling for the good things in life, such as an awareness of good food, how to be hospitable, how to set a beautiful table with common objects close at hand. (Continued on page 130)

Learning to be a cordial, relaxed host comes easiest if you start when you are young. Table setting practice breeds love of nice things.

All last winter our children gave dinner parties—one a month. One of the three would be host, or hostess, taking the responsibility, planning the menu, shopping for food. Everything was discussed by all three, endlessly sometimes: how to set the table, how to arrange a centerpiece with fruit or flowers, whether to use fingerbowls, how to serve.

It was a lot of trouble for me, for the kitchen would look as if a hurricane had hit it. But it was certainly worth the effort. For our three children have learned so much. And it is really fun, once you make up your mind and swing (Continued on page 148)

This dinner was a very creditable performance on all scores. Mike coped admirably with all situations—conversational and gustatory.

Mother was only a minor accessory—merely passing the cake. We ate in the same room, at another table, for eavesdropping.

Best way to develop a lot of poise is to be put in situations where poise is needed. Then it seems to emerge.

When youngsters engineer their own dinner parties, let them plan the table setting

Do you think you know the younger generation's likes and dislikes? For an inside track, turn them loose on your china cupboards and observe what they choose for a party setting. It will be as unfrilled and unfurbelowed as their favorite menus, like the onion soup set-up opposite. Earthenware plates and bowls, Shenango Pottery Co. Glass by Blenko. Naturalizing drifts of bulbs in your lawn is the best way to make shady places colorful.

Try the EASY WAY to grow spring bulbs

By Dr. Joseph E. Howland
House Beautiful's Garden Editor

Are you tired of digging and replanting your spring bulbs each summer? Then naturalize them in drifts in your lawn and forget them. They will bloom year after year, and you won't even be troubled by the usual messiness of dying leaves because you can cut them off with your lawnmower three weeks after the blossoms have faded.

You don't get big tulip blossoms this way, of course. In fact, you shouldn't even try to naturalize the long-stemmed giants, the familiar Cottage and Darwin tulips. Instead, grow the dwarf, early kinds, listed in the catalogs as Species tulips. Praestans and the two-toned Kaufmanniana (opposite page) are exceptionally satisfactory for naturalizing.

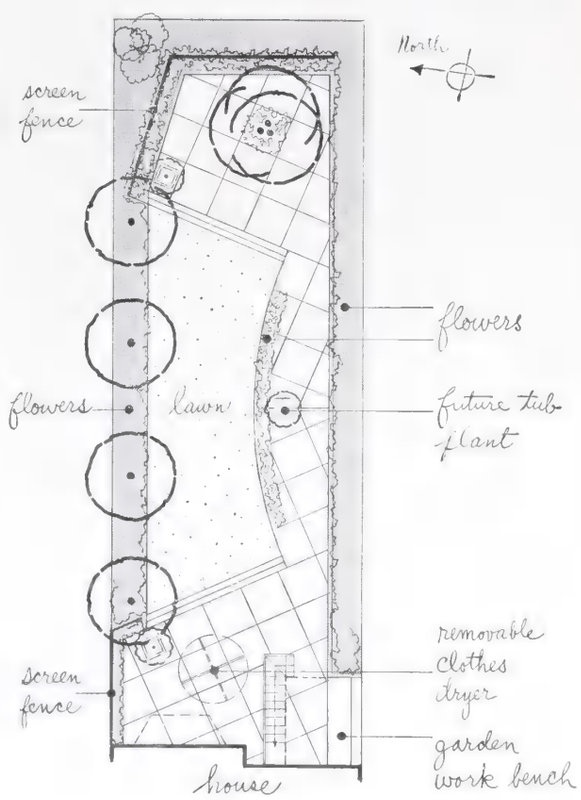
You can naturalize any of the common daffodils, hyacinths, and crocuses. Again, flowers won't be quite as big as if you pampered the plants in special beds, but, barring moles and rabbits, your bulbs will go on flowering for years.

All these hardy bulbs multiply more or less rapidly when naturalized. You can look forward to a big dividend in extra bulbs every five years if you want to dig them. Or you can just let the drift get bigger. (Continued on page 193)

Week ends + $340 = this outdoor living room

See what you can do to convert a small piece of land only 25′ by 72′, into a . . . wonderful place to live

Not many city lots offer as pleasant a place to dine as this tree-sheltered terrace. The George Pynchons got this plus play area, a flower garden, and a great feeling of unconfined, outdoor-living space. Paving is rough-surfaced, gray concrete with brick insert for color.



Space here is too valuable to permit using any exclusively for a service yard. So portable clothes-dryer fits into children's play terrace and is easily stored near garden work bench (see plan on the opposite page).

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RONDAL PA

Careful planning resulted in a long "trike" run, grass for tumbling, and all the flowers the busy Pynchons can manage.

Garden designed by Douglas Baylis Landscape Architect

Those glamorous outdoor living rooms you see in pictures don't have to cost a fortune. You can create a mighty wonderful place for little money—if you are willing to give up some week ends to do the work yourself. You don't have to be an expert gardener. The average man-of-the-house can cope with the necessary carpentry and building.

The first step is to go to a landscape architect who can analyze your needs in terms of design, because it takes design tricks to make a small lot look bigger. Here, for example, the curve of the plant bed exaggerates the length, and the over-scaled steps add to the feeling of width.

Yet this outdoor room isn't expensive. The George Pynchons built it themselves from a sketch made on the back of an envelope by landscape architect Douglas Baylis. The only costs were: fences, $29; used bricks, $55; plants, $96; concrete, $110; landscape architect's fee, $50.

HOW TO MAKE A COOK'S TOUR

By Elizabeth Church

THE DAILY ARTS OF GOOD LIVING

The best way to become a gourmet is to eat the best food in the world.

A trip to France, where it's hard to get a bad meal, can do wonders for your home cooking

The best way to learn about good food is to eat it. The cook who is striving for gourmet status deserves to taste the best food obtainable. Boiled down to the fewest number of words, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL recommends that the ambitious cook make a gastronomic tour of France.

There can be no argument about this. France has evolved the finest, most fully developed, most sophisticated cuisine the world has ever known. And it flourishes at every social and economic level.

Said more bluntly, it is almost impossible to get a bad meal in France. An American would have to make incredibly stupid mistakes to meet up with bad food in la belle France. So even a short trip with gastronomic objectives is entirely feasible. For if you eat two great meals a day for two weeks, you can have 28 gourmet experiences in the short space of a fortnight. And if you select your menus with any kind of plan, you can educate yourself amazingly in those food classifications where you are either weak—as a cook—or curious as an eater.

Is it hard to find the fine restaurants in France? And do French restaurants serve a better standard of food than American restaurants? Have no fears about either of these problems. "Eating out" in France is a far different matter than at home. France is a nation of gourmets, as well as a nation of "diner-outers." Paris alone has more than 2,500 restaurants, and Paris is not the only gastronomic center in the country by a long shot. Your problem, as a first visitor to France, is more one of how to keep from drowning in the showers of restaurant lists that your friends will start pouring down on your head when they hear you are off on a French eating safari.

But France has a highly developed system to help you find out how to eat a good meal, wherever you are. Buy the Michelin "Guide de France," a highly respected, universally used guidebook which combines, under one cover, all the functions of our American "Hotel Directory," Duncan Hines' two guide books, and the Rand McNally "Road Atlas."

Food terms you'll encounter on typical French menus, to help you refresh your college French and enable you to order what you want easily

CARTE DU JOUR—menu for day.

COUVERT ET BEURRE—cover charge and butter. These are always extra. Bread is always to be found on the table, and water, unless bottled, is supplied free though grudgingly.

HORS D'OEUVRES VARIÉS—assorted appetizers. These include such items as smoked meats and fish, caviar, pâté de foie gras, sardines, tuna fish, and snails (escargots) as well as many salad combinations: eggs in mayonnaise, asparagus in mustard sauce, cucumbers or tomatoes in French dressing.

POTAGES—soups.

- Bisque—a thick cream soup, generally made of shellfish.
- Purée—a thick soup, the thickening of which comes from the slow cooking of such vegetables as potatoes or dried peas.

OEUFS—eggs.

- Oeufs brouillés—scrambled eggs.
- Oeufs durs—hard-boiled eggs.
- Oeufs en gelée—eggs in aspic.
- Oeufs farcis—stuffed eggs.
- Oeufs pochés—poached eggs.
- Oeufs sur le plat—fried eggs.
- Omelette aux champignons—mushroom omelette.
- Omelette au jambon—ham omelette.
- Omelette aux fines herbes—chopped herb omelette.

POISSONS—fish and Crustacés—shell fish.

- Bouillabaisse—classic French fish soup flavored with saffron and garlic. Since it is served in courses, it constitutes an entire meal.
- Coquilles St. Jacques—scallops served in a cockle-shell.
- Crevettes—shrimps and prawns.
- Écrevisses—crayfish.
- Homard—lobster.
- Huîtres—oysters.
- Langouste—small lobster.
- Maquereau—mackerel.
- Moules—mussels.
- Quennelles de brochet—small dumplings of pike.
- Raie au beurre noir—skate wings in black butter.

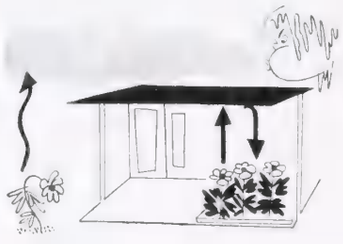
PROJECT

In September and October your garden can have a corner as inviting as this if you knowingly build comfort into it.



How to hold back the frost

Keep out cold winds that would chill you and your plants. Breezes that are a blessing in hot weather can rob you of weeks of delightful outdoor living in the fall. Solid fences must be carefully studied for height and placement to prevent whirlpooling.

Trap the sun heat in protected spots during the day, so that you build up a tangible heat reserve to keep you warmer on autumn evenings and to keep frost away from your plants during the night. Dark pavings trap the most heat; light the least.

Cut off the heat loss to the sky. Crisp, clear nights with a harvest moon may be good for romance, but you and your plants chill quickly unless there is a shield between you and the cold sky. Shield can be almost anything—even canvas.

AND MRS. WAYNE VALLEY, OWNERS; OSMUNDSON & STALEY, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

This sunpocket remains comfortable weeks longer because of orientation, fencing, paving, and overhang.

Drain away the cold air by planning your fall terrace and garden a foot or so above the surrounding garden. Then provide an opening at the lowest spot in yard, so cold air can finally flow away. NOTE: tender plants keep warmest in raised places, too.

Move in a color show of fall flowers to keep your garden and terrace looking like summer. Failure to do this, rather than frost, is the real reason that many gardens turn brown in mid-September. You can't expect tired summer flowers to supply a real display this late.

Extend your color season with Chrysanthemums

Line your terrace with big pots or tubs of chrysanthemums in full bloom to get a new look for autumn. This is the time of year you want the enclo-ed, protected feeling of a sun pocket instead of the open, airiness you wanted in the summer.

Put this bright picture in your picture window and the coming brownness of autumn won't seem so evident. Chrysanthemums can be planted directly into a flower bed or left in their pots or tubs to sit on the paving outside the window, as shown.

SKETCHES BY MARY FAULCONER

Bring a tub of flowers indoors. We associate chrysanthemums with crisp football weather, but they do very well indoors despite the 70-degree room temperature. But you must keep them in a light place or the blossom colors will fade.

Don't hesitate to dig chrysanthemums in full bloom: they are amazingly tough. Just be sure to get a sizable ball of soil with the roots, shade the plants with paper for three days, and water generously. For more about culture, see page 194.

You'll live a long, long while with the woodwork in your home. That's why it's so important to choose woodwork that will keep on pleasing you as long as you live in your home. Curtis has made that kind of woodwork for 85 years. Many Curtis designs are the work of well-known architects—styled by master hands. Here are some pointers that will help you choose wisely and well . . .

Look for Good Design

You wouldn't want to add or subtract a single detail of this Curtis mantel. See how the simple lines accentuate the beauty. Here's an excellent choice for any type of home. Curtis makes many other styles of mantels, too.

Look for Fine Craftsmanship

The stamp of expert workmanship is reflected in this charming Curtis doorway—for all Curtis Woodwork is made like fine furniture. Each piece is trade-marked and carefully inspected at the factory. Our Woodwork Idea Book shows many other beautiful entrances.

Look for Choice Materials

Only choice lumber is used in the production of Curtis Woodwork. Yet this fine Curtis china case—one of several styles—is priced to fit the modest budget. Made for corner and wall installation, with and without glass door. There are Curtis cases for every room of the house.

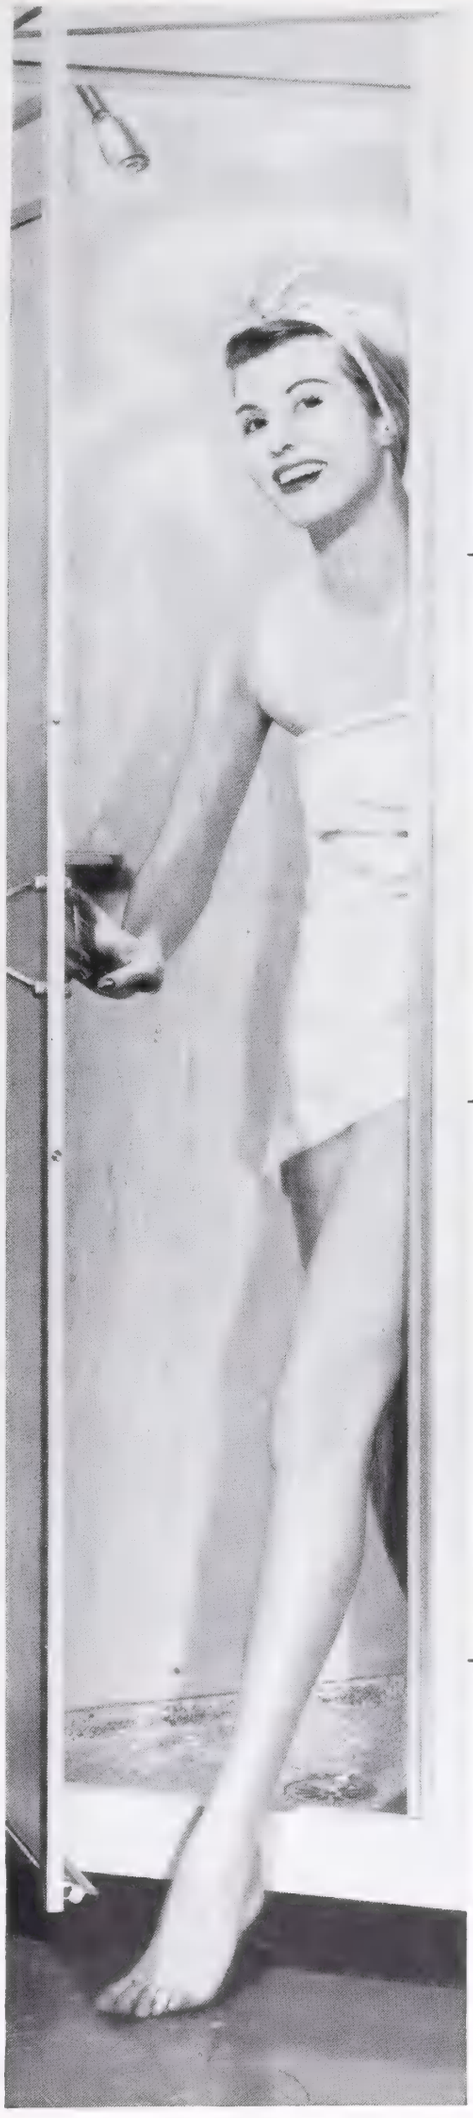
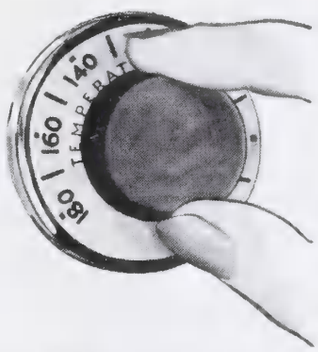
There's always room for improvement! So thought Hotpoint when they redesigned their Disposall. They changed the collar to make installation easier and cheaper. They engineered the innards to cut wear and tear, make jamming on hard pieces of garbage practically impossible. Then they made the whole thing compact and streamlined. All you do is scrape garbage down sink opening, turn the handle to "on" position, turn on cold water. In about one minute the refuse from an average meal is shredded and flushed away.

You didn't think you could buy a kitchen in a package, did you? A starter package, that is. American Kitchens have just such a thing with seven different pieces which take up only 8′ of floor space. There's a 54″ sink with storage space beneath, two base cabinets with black or red vinyl counter tops, two wall cabinets, and two little what-not shelves. If your kitchen is tiny, this package may be all you can fit into it. If it is larger, use the package as a starter and add more cabinets later on when it is convenient budget-wise.

DRAWINGS BY KELLY OESCHLI





Of course you know there are different kinds of cold. But did you know you can get three different kinds in one refrigerator? Frigidaire's Imperial model gives them to you, each kind with its own refrigeration system. The Locker-top freezing compartment, with separate door, maintains super-cold temperatures. Then the shelved food storage compartment is kept at low cold. (It defrosts automatically.) And finally, hydrators have super-moist cold for fresh vegetables and fruits. The total capacity is a big 10 cubic feet.

into it. I've noticed they watch our grown-up parties with a kind of clinical interest now, to pick up pointers.

So Mike called up his friends, and this is a blow-by-blow account of how the party proceeded:

"What will you want to eat, Mike?"

"Oh, gee, Mom, you ought to know—spareribs, corn meal muffins and sliced tomatoes," and he proceeded to describe all his favorite foods, including ice cream with chocolate sauce and cake.

"Don't you want a vegetable, Mike?"

"Well," he stalled, and you could see he couldn't even remember the name of a vegetable, "what is plentiful in the market now?" Good for him! None of those out-of-season luxury vegetables. If he couldn't think of any vegetables, at least he knew how to throw the ball back at me.

"Oh, there are all kinds in now—several varieties of squash, asparagus . . ."

"Let's have asparagus with browned butter and nuts," interrupted Mike. This sounded like a good menu, and fun to eat, for the young seem to like to with their fingers.

"Today is Monday, Mike, after school go to the meat ma and order the spareribs. How m do you think you should orde

"There will be eight of us, you and Dad. Will three pou be enough?" Mike answered.

"No, you had better plan al a pound per person. Spareribs c in a cut known as 'sides.' O heavy 'sides,' for we want lot meat instead of lots of bones. to six pounds of 'sides' will fine. So three sides will be am Then on Thursday we will ch and see what else we will need.

"Oh gee, Mom, you're swell." Mike gave me a big hug and das off for school.

THURSDAY morning we chec our supplies. We had some the staples on hand: the Dro dary Corn Muffin Mix and tin Chocolate Sauce. In the fre was plenty of ice cream an chocolate fudge cake. So the sert and the corn muffins w both under control.

Pour boiling water over and stir with same spoon until all is melted. This way you don't have any drippy honey to clean up. A Pyrex pitcher makes your measuring easy. Stir in the soy sauce and add the garlic to the soy brew.

I AM telling all these things to Mike. "Now, Mike, lay the sides of pork in the pan and pour the sauce over, seeing that all of the pork has some of the brew on it. This is called marinating. We do this for twenty-four hours, turning occasionally so that all sides will be well soaked. I will put the ribs over for you tomorrow, for all pork requires long, slow cooking in a low oven."

Mike has enjoyed every minute of the making of the marinade. What fun it is to try and get the honey from the jar to the Pyrex pitcher without spilling!

Four hours before you plan to serve dinner, take the pork out of the refrigerator and cut ribs in serving portions. Arrange ribs in

At these parties Mom and Pop take a back seat. We sit at the bridge table where the children usually sit when we entertain.

WHEN you plan a party with the kids, be sure to allow more time than you would in the preparation of your own party, for there are so many interesting gadgets to investigate in a kitchen, and everything is such fun through young eyes that it spoils half the fun if you have to rush.

These small dinner parties make the young aware of the fact that they should plan things ahead of time. They give them a sense of responsibility for getting the best for their money; they give them an idea of the quantity of food to buy; in short, they show them to entertain graciously.

If the young are taught at h the how of cooking, the import of eye appeal, of textures, a rectly set table, then when are ready to assume the resp bility of running a house, will not be thrown for a loss.

FRIENDS of mine who have h of our dinner parties for the y often remark, "Why didn't I t of that? Why, my child wante cook a dish the other night a was flabbergasted. I wasn't in mood to have him whipping some fancied recipe and mes up the kitchen."

If you have a special night the young, they will look for to their night and regard i great fun. It is fun for Mom Pop, too. For there is al that element of speculation as wonder what crisis will dev and whether there will be enc (Once, for a party, we were n one pork chop.) proportions of the blend and table salt are merged to give you "automatic" herbing, so to speak, when you salt the food. What could be simpler or more foolproof? You use the Garlic-Herb Salt in the same manner. Unlike conventional garlic salts, this one gives the food a mild, muted flavor of garlic. No such thing, you say? Normally, no; but in this case, the herb base somehow achieves that phenomenon.

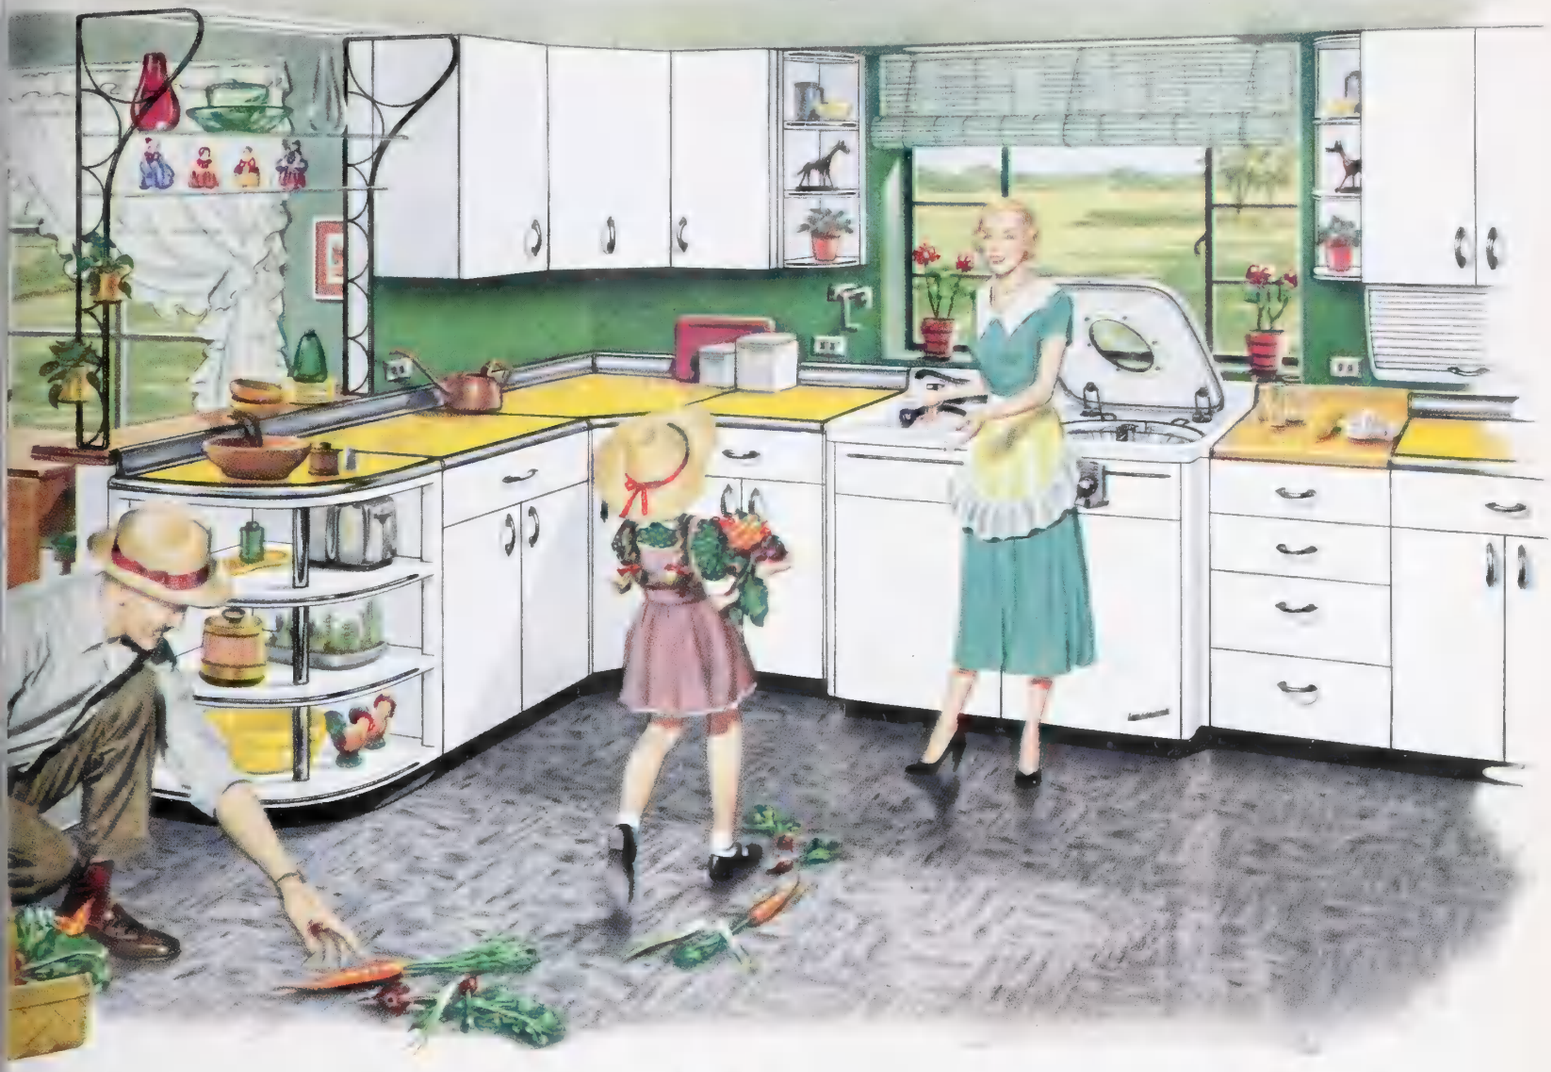
The Anderson's herbed mustard is truly a masterpiece. No wonder some of New York's famed French restaurants use it in preference to imported ones. It's semi-fluid because of the wild-vinegar content. Far more pungent and flavorful than the usual garlic. What it and the mixed-herb blend do for the flavor of this delectable mustard is something you won't appreciate until you taste it for yourself. A mustard with hearty zest but no harsh bite in it.

Anderson Farm also has a wild-garlic salad vinegar that those who like garlic to assert itself, as I do, will welcome enthusiastically. Though wild-garlic predominates in this vinegar, seven other varieties blended with it give it a sparkling undertone.

Mr. Anderson, who is the guiding star of the Farm, is an ex-advertising man who went into herb growing and blending as a hobby, but although it has now grown into a thriving business, he prides himself on the fact that, as in the hobby days, the herbs are still rubbed by hand and given the painstaking care that assures their full, aromatic goodness in the final product.



The 9-Herb Blend costs 75¢ for a 2-oz. jar; a 4-oz. jar of the Herb Salt or the 5½ oz. jar of Herbed Mustard are also 75¢. 4-oz. jar of Garlic-Herb Salt costs 80¢, and the Wild Garlic Vinegar, 55¢ for an 8-oz. bottle. All from Anderson Farm, Tinicum, Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

Mustard comes into this food round-up as the constituent of the Anne Russell Artichoke Relish. It boasts a superbly blended mustard dressing, given extra savor by the use of mustard seed. It's thick with shredded artichokes, cabbage, and onions that are as crisp as though they'd been freshly picked and shredded. Green and red pepper bits add their savor, too, to the tasty vegetable make-up. The sweetness is held down to a mere breath, allowing the zesty tang of the dressing's flavorful condiment blend to dominate the scene. This, to my way of thinking, is as it should be with mustard-base relishes. Two 8-oz. jars cost $1.85. From Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

A Mexican version of the fiery American sauces used for pit-barbecued meats and fowl is an apt way to describe Mexican Steak Marinade, which has been made available by the El Poche Café of San Gabriel, where meats so marinaded are a stellar attraction. It's the color and consistency of catsup, given its fire by red chili. With such competition, its garlic content becomes veritably subtle. A savory spice blend, wine vinegar, and oil complete the exotic marinade. For best results, the steak, fowl, chops, or whatever else you want to embellish, should be allowed to drink up the marinade on all sides of it for at least 24 hours, so it can penetrate the fiber completely. You then proceed with broiling, pan frying, or the cooking method you wish. It somehow manages to preserve the natural meat juices and gives the meat itself a savory sparkle, without submerging its flavor. The 11-ounce jar goes a long way; costs $1.25. From El Poche Kitchens, 233 West Mission Drive, San Gabriel, California. Recipes and explicit instructions accompany it, for the El Poche people are anxious that you use it in the manner that will do it justice.

If you're in the mood for something really sumptuous for a buffet party or appetizer course for a dinner party, our candidate is Galatine of Chicken de Voaille, imported from France. One of those culinary creations they excel at, this superb pack is obviously the work of chefs who know how it should be done. Preparing galatine meat is a complicated and time-consuming project that you're not likely to embark on for yourself. It's made of layers of breast chicken, goose liver and pork, embellished with truffles and subtly spiced. The merger is packed into a chicken-skin casing and that in turn is dressed with aspic. It emerges in loaf form which is readily sliced.

In presenting to you, the reader, the very fine house shown on pages 90 through 101, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is keenly aware of the limitations of pictures and words. The more skillfully a house is designed, the more intangible, unphotographable factors enter into its quality and personality. And intangibles don't photograph.

In looking at a photograph of a person you miss such living qualities as grace of movement, warmth of manner, or a musical, well-modulated voice. You also miss such spiritual qualities as kindness, imagination, and intelligence.

In this respect, photographs of a house are like those of a person. There is a great deal they don't tell you. Yet a house that is great has a great complex of characteristics that affect your sensations and emotions: sights, sounds, and smells, forms and symbols. These characteristics build up into a whole general set of impressions.

Having shown you 12 pages of pictures, we would like to tell you now what the pictures don't tell about the Hanisch house. What kind of thinking went into the design? When you understand the thinking that produced the design you then have hold of something that will help you solve any problem of your own—whether it is building a new house, redecorating an old one, buying a new carpet, or merely placing a chair.

The limitation of the photographs of the Hanisch house is that they show you objects without showing the total effect the objects create. So when you see a picture of something you like, try to see just what it was in the whole situation which caused that effect. Only when you are able to do this will you be able to work intelligently to create that same effect in your own situation.

Everyone knows how this works in the field of clothes. A dress may be a very beautiful thing in itself, but it will create an entirely different effect on different people. In houses, as in clothes, it is the effect you are after. In both cases the effect can be produced in different ways. The effects of the Hanisch house were produced by a sure hand.

Walk through this house with us again, trying to establish the total effects, as created by the numerous parts. The house is approached from a quiet, unostentatious side street, and through a motor court on the west. The garage projects at right angles from the house. Since it opens at the back, instead of into the court, your car pulls up against a blank wall. The entrance wall of the house is of stone. The entrance is marked by a wide door of obscure glass, behind a metal lattice of more or less Chinese design. To the left of the entrance are three narrow glass slits, leaving parts of the wall standing clear, like columns. Further left, the house breaks out in another slight, wing-like projection. The roof

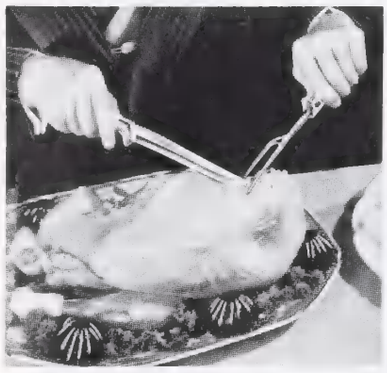
Only the size of the structure, the quality of the material and the design give the faintest hint that this home might be anything exceptional. Even this hint is only apparent to the practiced eye.

But once you pass through the door you are in a different world. From the open sunniness of the entrance motor court you find yourself in a world of cool shadows and filtered sunlight. There is a sound of falling water from somewhere inside. The house not only looks cool and feels cool, it sounds cool. All the senses are satisfied. You suddenly realize that the stone wall in the front of the house is no accident. It was designed as a barrier—a well-bred barrier, but a barrier just the same. Without being too obvious about it, it enables the owner to withdraw from the outside world, from the elements as well as people.

As you stand inside the front door, a wide loggia paved in green cement tiles, stretches to the right and left, ending visually in each case, though not actually, in a blank wall. Straight ahead, with no visible barrier, you look into a large court, which seems to be neither inside nor out. Across the court, to the right, you look through another wide opening into a large living room—how large, you are scarcely aware at first, because everything is on such a large scale. No matter which way you look you get a feeling of great OPENNESS.

The living room is a harmony of light browns and greens, the richness coming from the tiniest gradations in tone and value. Some rooms are overpowering: some flatter you, make you feel as if you yourself looked like a picture in Harper's Bazaar. This one simply lets you alone. Somehow it is a delightful feeling.

As you begin to relax in the atmosphere of the living room, you are aware of an effect of RESTFULNESS. You begin to look about and you become aware that you can't find any sign of the owner or architect or decorator as an individual person. Everything appears to be the product of one mind. Nothing pulls on for attention.



As this effect grows, you begin to pay a great compliment to the composite owner-architect-decorator person, for real simplicity is a high achievement indeed. It comes from organizing a lot of separate elements into a coherent whole. It is very different from plainness, which results from poverty. It is also different from straightforwardness, which is often only bad manners. Even recognition of this kind of art, which appears to be no art at all, is quite an achievement in itself. You begin to feel that the owners and the designers are all very sophisticated fellows. You even include yourself in this knowledgeable club, for you are pleased with yourself to have caught the subtleties of it all.

As your analysis continues, you become more and more aware of how the effects were achieved and you become more and more delighted at the exhibition of skills. For the hall now comes to life as an indoor room which seems to belong to the outside. The court is an outdoor room which partakes of the quality of an indoor one. Both subtly prepare your mind for the living room, which is substantially an indoor one. This, in turn, opens out, on the side opposite the court, onto an outdoor room which is really an outdoor one.

And how were all these effects achieved? It is really quite simple. Both the exposed stone, which makes up the front wall of the hall or loggia and the cement tiles on the floor of the loggia, are outdoor materials which you associate with the outside. Since the hall is frankly a passage way, and not a place to lounge or relax, there is very little furniture such as is necessary in the other rooms in a house. In this case, what there is—Chinese teak chairs and a Korean chest—is very elegant. It all belongs very much to the inside. If this were not so, the hall would pertain too much to the outside and the feeling of transition between the inside and out would be lost. Another device, which you don't see, is the acoustic plaster on the ceiling. This deadens the effect of footsteps and is a great factor in your total impression of the loggia.

To make the inner court pertain to the inside, the floor is partly cement, handled in an inside manner, though it is an outside material. The rest of the floor is covered with flat, ground cover treated literally as a carpet. The pool gives an indoor feeling because it is raised from the ground on a pedestal—quite like a table. The flowering plants, like the pool, are given an indoor treatment by being set on raised pedestals,

The indoor feeling of the living room is partly the result of the softness of the finishes. the upholstered furniture. the wall-to-wall carpeting. partly the result of the wide overhangs on the windows. partly the result of the placing of the main group of furniture in the angle of two windowless walls. The only large area of hard surface in the room is the plywood ceiling. but the main impression of the ceiling is not of hardness but of color. Like the over-all carpet. it exerts a unifying effect on the whole. RESTFULNESS and SIMPLICITY are the effects given by the living room.

It is only when you are taken through the rest of the house that you become aware of another surprising thing. You suddenly discover that just as the house was designed to give the family PRIVACY FROM THE OUTSIDE WORLD. it was also designed for PRIVACY OF THE FAMILY GROUP WITHIN THE HOUSE. Then beyond this. each part of the family can have PRIVACY FROM EACH OTHER.

Just as the front door makes the first line of defense. the door from the main hall into the hall connecting the study and the bedrooms makes a second line of defense. Close this and the family is away from the public parts of the house. secure in its own domain. They can go around in complete dishabille. quite unobserved. But there is still a hind line of defense. Let any person close his own door and he is secure from the rest of the family. in his own room. Emphasizing this is the fact that each of the boys' rooms has an outside entrance. opening into a private motor court. separate from the main one in the front of the house. race. Part of it is a family private sitting room—really two rooms in one, with a pair of bathrooms and a pair of dressing rooms surrounding it.

What such planning provides is FLEXIBILITY OF USE. It makes it possible for a family, composed of a loosely joined group of autonomous individuals, to carry on different activities alone or together, without getting too far away from each other but also without getting in each other's way. This quality is further accentuated by the fact that there is a playhouse (not shown here) in the corner of the garden. A party might be in full swing in the playhouse without disturbing anyone in the house itself. It is possible for all sorts of things to go on at once. There might be a business conference in the study, afternoon tea in the living room, and another group of entirely different activities centered about the playhouse and the pool. One son might spend his evening with his parents before their sitting-room fire while the other boy is watching television in the study.

With a big party of 50 or 60 persons in the living room, small groups may wander off into the playhouse, the court, the outdoor terrace, or the study. The dining room is serenely alone, as it should be—if dining is to be worthy of the name.

In this house, plan and decoration both worked for the same end—to secure an effect of COOLNESS and WITHDRAWAL, of RESTFULNESS and SIMPLICITY, with PRIVACY FROM THE OUTSIDE WORLD—for the FAMILY AS A GROUP and FROM EACH OTHER. The end result is great FLEXIBILITY OF USE.

Here is a house with all the characteristics that produce good living in our time. Study it, not to copy it, but to secure the same effects in a situation of your own.

Next, look to see how the space is divided. Study the plan. Look for a flexible plan, not one that will freeze your pattern of living as long as you live in it. You may want to make some changes immediately. You will certainly want to make others as your family changes with the years. So be sure you buy a house that can be changed at a minimum of expense. The movable storage wall shown on page 104 is one kind of device that makes it possible to add or subtract a room from your house overnight.

You will soon discover there are two kinds of operative builders. One puts up rows and rows of indifferent houses, all as alike as peas in a pod. The other kind supplies a ready-built house on receipt of your order—that is, he exhibits a model house of which he will build you a duplicate. He is equipped to fill your order in a matter of weeks, as compared to the months it takes to put up a custom-designed house.

It will be well worth your while to hunt up a builder of the second type, since he usually offers a choice of certain variations. For instance: The post and panel construction of this Virginia house is designed on a module principle so that solid panels, fixed glass, and sliding aluminum windows may be placed in varying arrangements. Thus the buyer may order the amounts of glass and solid wall that best meet his needs.

Whether you buy 800 square feet of space or 2,000, you will undoubtedly wish you had more. But even though the actual number of square feet you can afford is strictly limited by your pocketbook, you can obtain the illusion of additional space at no extra cost. The trick is to choose an open plan; that is, a house with the minimum of opaque interior partitions required for personal privacy. When two rooms open into one, it makes both rooms seem larger. And when the ceiling slopes upward, as it does in this house to a height of ten feet, you get a feeling of having more space than is really there.

Don't forget that the intrinsic element of your house is the basic structure—the supporting walls, the roof, the foundation flooring. Whatever is added to these on the inside is added primarily for looks. But proper design and discriminating choice of materials can make the structure itself so good-looking that there's no need to mask it wi interior finish. By eliminating t cost of that nonessential, t builder is frequently able to off more space for the same price. when you see well-designed, e posed structure as in our standar of-value house, it is a safe assum tion that you are getting mo house for your money.

There's no use kidding yourse Every extra that is added to house costs you money, whether t builder adds it or you pay for it rectly. So don't be misled by gl tering surfaces. If the cost of the doesn't show up in a higher pri or a smaller space, you can be su that something else has been sac ficed. Ask to read the specificatio and check them to see if there h been any hidden skimping.

In a cold climate, don't consid a house with concrete slab floo laid directly on the ground, unle there is some provision for war ing them. This may be done radiant hot-water heating pipes la in the floor, or by radiant ceili heat that hits the floor first, th bounces back. It may also be a complished, as it is in this hou by perimeter heating—a system which warm air circulates throu ducts in the concrete before it flo through outlets into the room.

A small but significant clue the probable values in a develo ment house is the presence of tree or two left standing by t builder. It is an indication of se sible site planning, and although costs him little to leave it, it w save you considerable money lat when you come to landscapin

Careful carpentry is another sig that you are getting your money worth. Detecting it calls for special training, since any hous wife can see for herself wheth two boards are joined evenly.

If you study the specifications the Virginia development hou you will notice several other detai that make it an outstanding valu for the money. There is a four-inc blanket of rockwood insulation the sidewalls. Two-inch fir plan ing is used instead of sheathing f the roof, and topped by two inch of insulation and a built-up grav surface. The floors are of aspha tile, which is one of the most ec nomical materials for relieving t hardness of a concrete slab, sin it may be laid directly on the sla without danger of deteriorati from condensation.

It was clear that our only hope of getting the house we wanted and cutting the contractor's price in half was to do our own contracting and our own carpentry, and to lend a hand with any other work we were capable of.

It wasn't easy to get started. We scoured the countryside before we turned up the mason who contracted to lay the concrete slab foundation, build the cement-block shell, and do the stonework for the fixed price of $3,300.

I didn't know enough about electrical wiring or plumbing to risk monkeying around with them, so I had to dig up subcontractors for those jobs. And plastering, I'm convinced, is an art that amateurs had better let alone. So we let out a contract for the ceilings and the few plastered walls in the house.

The rest we did ourselves. That meant anything and everything that entailed hammering a nail into a piece of wood or wielding a paint brush—and in any kind of house that's a very big part of the job. I made up all of my own doors and window frames, so they cost only the price of the lumber. In addition I worked along with the mason on the structural shell, the stone walls, and flagstone floors, did all the patio masonry myself, and dug the drainage ditches.

ONE of our most important money-saving schemes was the use of cement block construction. It goes up much faster than wood framing and provides some insulation as well as serving as the supporting structure. The cement blocks have been painted temporarily with white water-proofing paint, and most of our visitors don't realize the outside of the house is unfinished until I point it out.

Most of the interior walls that are not of masonry or glass we paneled with vertical red cedar boards that we put up ourselves (see page 109). That kind of wall surface is one of the simplest for an amateur to tackle. All you have to do is nail up narrow recessed strips to serve as furring, then nail a wide board to each side of each narrow strip.

I designed the house to follow the slope of the site as closely as possible, so we have two floor levels with a three-step rise between them. As a result, we needed a minimum of bulldozing to prepare the site. So now, instead of being s rounded by half an acre of sa lot, we have no more than feet of broken ground beyond house at any point. That me we have only a ten-foot-wide p imeter to grade and plant, wh the natural woods beyond sup us with free landscaping. So saved a good bit there, not o on construction and landscap costs, but also on future maint ance. (After spending most of week ends for eight years mow what seemed like acres of la surrounding our rented homeste I can cheerfully do without greensward.)

ANYBODY who tries to build own house is in for desperate ments, and we had ours. Fortun ly for us, our deal with the ma called for his redoing anything t wasn't done right. But we all pretty discouraged when the fl stone steps to the dining area l to be ripped out the third ti There wouldn't have been so m of this if I had been able to s on the spot and supervise time. But as a designer with mund Spence Associates, I had devote the major portion of week to earning my salary, though the office was more t generous in giving me extra t off, the bad mistakes always seem to occur when I was in New Y

Another drawback was that small part of my carpentry w had to be done between 8:00 p and midnight with my wife hold the flashlight and my hands cold I could hardly hold a n Since it takes an hour to comm from New York to Westport, Co by the time I got home, had d ner, changed to old clothes, drove out to the site, it was usua quite dark.

One of our most desper periods was the long and frust ing wait for delivery on rock la the material that goes on the ins walls before plastering. We knew only two companies in the coun that made it, and, while one of th was on strike, the other could keep up with the extra orders

Hauling the huge one-tone cu stone that we acquired to form lintel of the living-room firepl provided another obstacle t looked for a time to be quite surmountable. We finally sol that one by a complex exped

d much as I hate to admit it, y came when I actually pulled ld vaudeville stunt of sawing the beam I was perched on. ly my sense returned in time e to drop the saw and grab a e rafter as I was about to off into space.

OU decide to build your own se and announce your inten- to your friends, you'll find lmost all of them will make ous offers to come and help. lon't let that mislead you. If r two show up to lend you d for half a day each, you be very lucky indeed. But are certain jobs that lend elves very well to team work 1 can drum up a team. We raced to see which ould nail one row of boards eaves to ridgepole the fastest. ing local help by the day out well if you limit it to the when you're doing a job that really takes two to be done efficiently. You can save up jobs like that until you have enough of them to give a man a week's work, or until you have set aside the money to pay him.

My wife is not exactly an Amazon, but she turned out to be far and away the most valuable workman on the job, since she made it possible for me to do many things that would otherwise have taken two men—like holding upright posts steady while I nailed them in place. It was she who finished all the boards for the interior paneling before I nailed them in place. She also helped on the masonry and we're very proud of the professional job she did of finishing the joints between the flagstones in the living room. The children helped too. Even though their work was largely limited to fetching and carrying, it saved just that much time and energy.

When we first moved into the house in September a year ago, only the roof over our heads distinguished our situation from camping out. The house was far from being enclosed, since none of the glass was in place, and the livingroom walls alone are about 50 per cent glass. Our bedding consisted of one double box spring and mattress. The children slept on the spring and we slept on the mattress supported by rolls of insulation. One by one, the rolls of insulation had to be put to the use for which they were originally intended and the mattress began to acquire a deep sag in the middle.

WHEN we finally found ourselves on the floor we had to take over the box spring and get army cots for the children.

Fortunately, we had radiant heat in the floor, or we wouldn't have been able to stay there at all, or even to continue the work. That's one thing about radiant heat—you can get considerable comfort from it even in a wide-open space that is the thermal equivalent of outdoors. Any other kind of heat wouldn't make a dent. By late November the house was finally enclosed, but it was several months before we got around to caulking all the cracks between glass and floor. So the wind whistled in, and our fuel bills mounted. But we counted that as an unavoidable item of building expense.

My wife's housekeeping resembled the routine of a camp cook for almost a year. At first we had only a one-burner electric plate for cooking. When that was replaced several months later by a two-burner plate, she acted as if she had suddenly inherited the Waldorf kitchens. Until a few weeks ago she washed dishes in a dish pan perched on whatever was convenient, while visitors enviously admired our stainless-steel sink which was in position but not connected because we were waiting for the kitchen cabinets that had to be built first.

When you are doing your own building, you can't always schedule the work the way you'd like to. Usually you have to put off the jobs that would provide family comfort in favor of those that prepare the way for other work—like a piece of carpentry that has to be done before the electrician can proceed. But there are a few things I certainly wish I had done differently. If I had had the foresight to acquire all the materials we needed before we started, it would have saved weeks of delay while we scoured the countryside for additional supplies. And if I'd the sense to trim all the lu on the ground instead of after of the boards were in place I w have saved two electric hand that I burned out in the pr

I could have saved half my on heavy timber if I had doubled up on the roofing by roof joists as well as a dro ceiling. But I console myself the thought that the dropped ing, though unnecessary, does vide additional insulation.

I must admit my training i sign was a considerable help. you've made full-scale drawin various kinds of construction. have a pretty good idea of parts are put together. But al anyone could get the hang of simply by watching other build going up. Of course, you w have to have someone make y set of working drawings. Bu terpreting them is mainly a m of common sense and initiative suming that at some time in life you learned how to han a nail and saw a board. Wh comes to the more technical of engineering advice, you can that from your local building and your building inspector.

People keep asking us, "W you ever do it again?" I must fess there are days when I'd nothing better than to throw the hammer and pick-axe and right into a completely fini house—any house. But most o time we agree we not only w do it again, we'd get great s faction out of building an house right away so that we c put to immediate use some o tricks we learned, and have even better house.

Besides producing a climate-wise house for the Macon, Georgia, area, architect Webb was unusually successful in making his house look larger than it is. This effect comes from details like wall-to-wall carpeting of Rugcrofters broadloom and nicely scaled furniture like the "Chantilly Rose" terrace group by Lee L. Woodard & Sons. Webb's choice of materials is also indicative of canny planning. Here's what he specified:

In this one book you can find literally everything a traveler would want to know: road maps, street maps, lists of hotels and restaurants, prices, etc. Hotels and restaurants are graded and classified according to their quality, their prices, and the specialties in which they excel.

By a gourmet's standards, the Michelin ratings and recommendations of restaurants are uniquely reliable. They use a system of awarding one, two, or three stars to establishments that serve good food. In all of France there are only seven restaurants that rate three-star standing. Fifty-one have two-star standing. And 675 restaurants have one-star standing.

But the funny thing about the one-star places is that they are so good that they would have top rating if they existed at home in the United States. I have known people who have eaten many, many times at one-star places in the fond belief they were eating in France's absolutely best places, because they could not conceive of there being anything better.

So imagine the superb quality of restaurants enjoying the two- or three-star rating! Unless an American has had considerable experience eating the French haute cuisine, a three-star restaurant might well be over his head. He would know it was good food, but he would not know how really good. In short, a three-star restaurant is one of the best in the world, where the glories of the French cuisine are at their peak and the vins grands are memorable.

In these restaurants, price has no meaning. As Michelin puts it, a three-star place is worth a special journey, whereas a two-star place is worth a detour. This is a subtle French distinction which has more weight than might be apparent at first. I have eaten in four of the seven top establishments, and they have been such memorable occasions that I mean to make special journeys, if necessary, to experience the other three before I die.

The two-star restaurants are better than all but a handful of our best American establishments. This may be a bitter pill for us Americans to swallow. But facts are facts, and you can prove it any time you are in France.

The Michelin Guide contains five pages of maps which are a cartographic version of where the great restaurants are to be found throughout the French nation can thus co-ordinate your plans with your eating plans, out having to wait till you a region or a territory to loca best restaurants.

The Michelin Guide ca bought at our larger Am book stores, such as Brentano the Doubleday chain, for $3.

What is the best time to m gastronomic tour? Anytime, t an off-season trip has the a tage of being both cheape easier. terraces, weather permitting. There are the salons de thé which make a specialty of sandwiches and pastries. And there are brasseries which are founded on the drinking of beer and the various types of food that go with beer.

Eating combines ideally with shopping and sightseeing, for they fill in the time between meals, and are conducive to building up an appetite and slimming the waist. Good restaurants have a way of occurring in good shopping sections, which is very agreeable and useful.

The midday closing (of both shops and museums) is felicitous for producing a peaceful mind at the lunch hour. This is a particularly good psychological aid to an American, for one can't fret about wasting time over a long, dawdlesome meal when there is nothing else one could be doing anyway.

This mental approach is quite essential to developing the attentive approach necessary to savoring the wonders of French food and appreciating French wines. For the French cuisine requires a different nervous pace from that which Americans are used to at home. It is necessary to slow down, or you will miss that Martini or highball. Fortunately the French way of life steps in and slows you down in spite of yourself. When you know you have to spend two hours over the lunch table, it actually does something to your ability to comprehend a delicate wine.

DINNER should be planned even more leisurely. Always ask your hotel concierge to telephone for a dinner reservation. This insures you individual attention, especially if the concierge and maitre d'hotel know and understand each other.

Your waiter will be happy to explain the menu to you and to help you in ordering. Always ask what the specialties of the house are. Ask also for the specialties of the day or season and for the chef's suggestion. When you have decided on the main course, summon the wine steward (sommelier). Tell him what you have ordered and consult with him over the wine list. It has been assumed by him that you have not dulled your palate with American cocktails, so don't tell him otherwise. He will be unhappy if you sip his choice vintage while eating salad or citrus fruits. The acid spoils the taste of the wine. If you avoid all these pitfalls, you will make him supremely happy as he decants your wine and wishes you bon appétit.

For example, we find the roux (a paste of flour and fat) is the commonest method of thickening liquids. It is the way we thicken soups, sauces, and gravies. It is at the basis of soufflés and croquettes and many puddings and pies.

With a blender you can get variety by using vegetable purées for thickening. But before the advent of the blender, this was impossible. Purées were too difficult and too time-consuming to make. But by using the blender it is sometimes easier to thicken liquids with a purée than with a roux. Since the base of the purée can be varied, this means real variety in the basic foodstuffs you use.

Meats and vegetables cooked together (as in stews) require no flour thickening if you use the blender. When the cooking is done, merely remove the meat from the dish and keep it warm while you put everything else into the blender. (However, remember to cool off the gravy and vegetables a bit so you won't break the glass.) After you have run the machine a few minutes, the result will be a gravy-like sauce thickened with puréed vegetables, which is then poured back over the meat, and produces a new kind of effect.

In the same way, left-over vegetables can be used to thicken soups. Try this and you have started on the possibilities of the blender, instead of having exhausted them.

Far more important than this, the blender purées raw vegetables and fruits. This means that y will be able to use raw food in yo diet in a way in which you ha never been able to do before. W few exceptions, the recipes ba on the use of the blender ha seldom got into the regular cook books. But the books put out by t blender manufacturers fairly te with recipes for raw vegeta drinks and soups. Since these bo lets are not in general circulati and are obtainable only when y buy one of the machines, here a a few of the manufacturers' re pes, just to show those of you w have had no experience with t wonderful machine the sort thing that you can expect it to time, giving the machine a chance to purée each one before you add the next.

This is one of the most comprehensive of a series of health drinks which can be based on either pineapple or carrot or tomato or orange juice.

The Knapp-Monarch Company, who call their product a "Liquidizer," give a whole series of what they call Fruit and Vegetable Cocktails. These use two cups of liquid to one cup of solid fruit and vegetable. They recommend using herbs in these cocktails. Here are some of their recommendations:

Tomatoes, celery, and chives.
Tomato, celery, cucumber, and basil.
Tomato, spinach, and mint leaves.
Beets, celery, and pineapple slices.
Cucumber, water cress, and grapefruit sections.
Carrot slices, celery, and marjoram.
Carrot slices and milk. (Try this—you will think it contains coconut.)
Coconut slices and water.
Carrot slices and orange sections.
Carrot slices, parsley, and tomato.
Apple sections and mint leaves.
Plum and apple sections.
Papaya and nectarine sections.
Papaya and grapefruit sections.

Landers, Frary and Clark, who call their product the "Universal Mixablend," emphasize puréed foods for babies. These take two to three minutes to make. The proportions are ¾ cup water to 2 cups of cooked diced carrots or green peas or 6 cups spinach.

Fresh fruit can be insinuated into cake icing, glorifying it into a cake filling. (Try this as a sauce for pancakes or waffles.) Or you can make a dressing for fruit salad of avocados, and powdered sugar, and whipped cream. (See "Fruits Widen Your Cooking Opportunities," HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, August, 1951.)

unto unmodern inconveniences. But there is more. The romantic nostalgia enwrapping the place, the magnificent mountain setting, or perhaps just the common urge to escape has already attracted a small but notable group of permanent residents—artist Zoré Kramer, living in a remodeled brewery; magazine writers Katharine Best and Katharine Hillyer, in what they call their "Little House in the Red"; Roger Butterfield, collecting 1890 oddments in an ex-castle with a magnificent view; Lucius Beebe and Charles Clegg, who do those remarkable books about railroads, in a house designed and lived in by the same John Piper who designed the opera house, but given modern refinements by Hollywood interior decorator Robert Hanley; and Walter Van Tilburg Clark, who taught English in the high school last year and coached the basketball team.

Should you, too, succumb, even for a day or two, you can easily commute for overnight to bright-light Reno, twenty-three miles away down steep Geiger Pass, once a great place for stagecoach robberies and pony express races, and still good for a thrill and excellent scenery. Or you can put up at the old Silver Dollar Hotel in Virginia City itself, still furnished in the style to which the bonanza kings so quickly became accustomed. Since Virginia City guards the right of man to his pet, yours will be welcome, be it dog or leopard. And if Manageress Florence Ballou Edwards, formerly of Boston, does not greet you herself, you may find her note at the desk: "Vacancies on the third floor. Please register, and I'll see you in the morning."

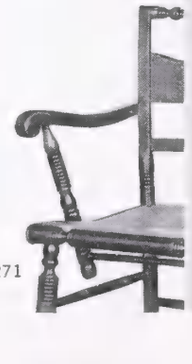
September and October—the Pacific Northwest's annual epidemic of Salmon Derbies. Almost anywhere from the Rogue River in Oregon to Vancouver Island, including especially Puget Sound, these provide the fisherman with salmon fishing at its best. And it seems all the better because of competition and prizes, while it gives non-fishermen something unusual in spectator sports.

September 16—the annual Albany-New York City Outboard Marathon on the Hudson River—a 140-mile motorboat race, customarily attracting over 300 contestants, exciting to be in, fun to watch.

September 16—Los Angeles' block-long bit of old Mexican marketplace, Olvera Street, celebrates Mexican Independence Day with fine Latin flair and much music and dancing.

September 18—The Hague, Holland: much worthy-of-watching pomp and circumstance as H. M. Queen Juliana rides forth in a fairy story golden coach to open the Dutch Parliament.



September 29-30—Taos Pueblo, New Mexico, its adobe walls hand-patted to fresh perfection in preparation, pays homage to San Geronimo with age-old ceremonial dances. Photographs permitted for a small fee.

Exactly what do the rates include? At some resorts, the published rates are good for room and meals only; elsewhere they may even include unlimited riding.

What do they mean, by "ranch"? It's a flexible word in southern Arizona, covering everything from the genuine working ranch that takes guests to roadside refreshment stands. Between these extremes are innumerable guest ranches, usually lodges with a pseudo-ranch background, but with vast variation in luxury and the emphasis on ranch atmosphere and activities. Conversely, the fact that a place is called a lodge, inn, resort, and such has nothing to do with the presence of horses.

Is the pool heated? Even the wonderful Arizona sun can't always rescue water temperatures from the effect of those wonderful Arizona two-blanket nights.

What will be going on? Plenty, especially if you can get about to enjoy the golf courses at Tucson, Phoenix, Wickenburg, the good music and theater at Tucson and Phoenix, the chronic square dancing, rodeos, sight-seeing almost everywhere. But check also the doings at the lodge or ranch of your choice. At some you're pretty much on your own until the crowds come. That may be all right with you. But at others, pre-season is all the more fun because of the smaller group riding up to the old mine, setting forth for the moonlight picnic, climbing into the station wagon for a barn dance or a round-up at a neighboring ranch.

Maple wonderland

If you like your autumn foliage show brilliant and early, take one of Vermont's eight Autumn Foliage routes—the shortest 96, the longest 207 miles, all marked by green and yellow signs. Data on routes, accommodations and colors are available at state information booths in Brattleboro, Bennington, Rutland, Woodstock, and Montpelier. One day will give you a taste, especially if you go at the season's height, during the first two weeks of October. Or you can stretch any of the routes a bit by stopping a while at choice spots like Weston, where the immaculate white houses are framed in crimson-gold vines, and you can start your Christmas shopping with the hand-woven textiles at the old Red Mill, or among the gourmet foods and equipment at the Old Country Store. Or you can stretch your trip by stopping over at such as the Basin Harbor Club, at Vergennes on Lake Champlain, open until October 15: rooms with bath, $10 and $15; de luxe cottages, $11 and $14, including meals.

Teasers

Just in case, now that summer's over, you're getting any staid ideas about settling down. . . . .

The Robin Line and Pan American World Airways have joined facilities to offer a ship-one-way, air-the-other combination to South Africa. Round trip can be booked with either line, at the regular 10 per cent round-trip discount.

To be first with the latest, start negotiations now for passage on the new United States Line's super superliner, the "S. S. United States," largest and fastest thing of its kind and scheduled to enter North Atlantic service some time next summer.

The Argentine State Line's new Rio Tunuyan, now in service, offers a 29-day cruise to Rio with six days there for those who can't find time for the usual, longer east coast cruise; and, in collaboration with Argentine Airlines, several sea-air tours distinguished by time saving and flexibility.

Latest route to Mexico—by air from Miami. Guest Airways does it non-stop, offers packaged vacations including both Miami and Mexico. Pan American and its Mexican affiliate, Compania Mexicana de Aviacion, do it daily with connections at Havana and a stop at Merida.

Round the world by air. Among other possibilities: the Philippine Air Line's one-ticket all the way service; Northwest and Scandinavian Airlines working together, with connections at New York or Tokyo. Either costs around $1700.

White Mountain Wonder

People who visit Dixville Notch, N. H., invariably report their experience in superlatives, especially if they've sojourned at The Balsams in any one of its 58 seasons existence. In case you haven't en briefed on what goes on up re, you should know that sports-n, sybarites, and scenery lovers

d the place more like a 5,000-e private estate than a hotel. It s its own lake, a movie theater, a

You can hardly name a sport tes start at $17 a day, and the a of all this and the red-gold you. Northeast Airlines runs

Berlin, N. H., whence you're

One more, rather revolutionary ture to bear in mind in case you r want to take the children vacaning with you: The Balsams has a children's guest house, The Windwhistle House, right next door to the hotel. Here the youngsters vacation merrily on their own under the supervision of trained counselors while parents enjoy an adult holiday. It's like sending the small fry to camp, but without any worries, for you can drop over to see them once a day and on Sundays.

Shop Talk

Clara Hammond, a globe-trotter from way back who has achieved considerable fame for her young people's tours of Europe, now comes up with a new edition of Shop With Confidence in Europe. This is an easily packable, terse little tome which covers the shopping situation in practically every city any traveler is likely to land in, and is two dollars and a half's worth of insurance against wasted time and traveler's checks. It ticks off the local specialties and the shops where, in Mrs. Hammond's experienced judgment, you stand the best chance of being satisfied in quality and services. All the shops selected are personally known to the author and rather rigorously tested for good businesslike behavior. The Marchbanks Press, 114 East 13th Street, New York 3, publishes this.

Cream of Asparagus Soup

2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon salt
1/16 teaspoon pepper
1 cup raw or frozen or canned asparagus tips

Place all ingredients in the blender. Cover and blend one to three minutes. Heat in a double boiler over low direct heat, stirring occasionally. (I leave out the flour and add more asparagus.)

To show you how extensively the blender affects all phases of cookery, the booklet put out by the Waring Company includes 340 recipes, covering beverages, cakes, canapes, cookies, desserts, dessert sauces, entrées, griddle cakes and waffles, hot breads, ice creams and sherbets, omelettes, pies, salads, salad dressings, sandwich spreads, sauces for meat and vegetables, and soups. There are also special sections on cookery for children and for the sick.

All of the companies give hints on special uses for the blender which most of them call "blender magic," or some such. It is hard to find old words that properly describe new things.

Vichysoisse, the current darling in the Cold Soup Set, is a push-over with the blender. You can make all sorts of cold soups patterned after it, using milk and whatever vegetables are on hand. (Try sprinkling thin slices of water chestnuts on top of these cold soups.)

Another terrific trick, with far-reaching implications, is to blend ground raw meat with only enough water to keep it from clogging the knives. This extracts all the juice from the meat and gives you a rich meat stock in a matter of minutes.

Water ices can be made by putting fruit juice and some scooped ice in the blender. They come out ready to serve. Here is a recipe from Knapp-Monarch:

Lemon Wonder

1 large lemon, peeled and halved
3 tablespoons sugar

Liquidize the lemon (including seeds and peel the size of a half dollar) with your machine in high. Add sugar and blend thoroughly. Break up two or three ice cubes and add to the mixture. Blend till smooth ice appears. If it freezes solid, turn off switch and work mixture with a spatula. Repeat blending. (EDITOR'S NOTE: And if it doesn't freeze, it tastes all right too.)

Milk drinks, such as chocolate or combinations of fruit juice and milk, can be whipped until they are frothy on top. Chocolate or cocoa prepared this way doesn't need whipped cream or marshmallows on top. Milk drinks whipped in the blender become smooth. It is impossible to get this effect by other means.

French dressing can be homogenized in the blender. Garlic disappears in the process and is so thoroughly blended with the oil and lemon juice that it is unnecessary to let it steep in the dressing. This makes obsolete a lot of salad lore. You can also make a low-fat French dressing extending your favorite dressing with puréed raw vegetables such as carrots, celery and green pepper, and a little tomato juice. Thus you keep the flavor you like, get a nutritious dressing that adheres, and still reduce your fat intake.

The blender helps you cope with allergies—the bane of a cook's existence. You have never known frustration unless you have had to cook for someone allergic to wheat for wheat is a basic part of our food. Whether you have this problem or not, use it as an excuse to experiment with rice. Just to make it easy for yourself, start off with something that is partly prepared already—puffed rice.

Pop some puffed rice into the blender. It comes out in the form of a flour as soft as thistledown with a delicious toasted taste. Since the grain has been already cooked it has lost the elastic qualities which make possible raised doughs so you will have to use it to make one of the primitive forms of cake. Try a new version of the old Scotch Shortbread.

Puffed-Rice Shortbread

Put puffed rice through the blender until you have two cups of puffed-rice flour. Add 2 tablespoons powdered sugar. Add 1 teaspoon salt. Take 7 tablespoons of butter and mix with the dry ingredients, just as you would for a crumb crust. Only make it into a flat round cake about $\frac{3}{4}$ inch thick. Make the cake on a cooky sheet. Prick it every two inches with a fork and bake it at 350° F. for 25 minutes. When it is cool, break it into pieces as you would shortbread. Or you can mold it into individual cakes, with half anched almond in the top of ch. Made this way, it closely re-mbles the almond cookies that inese restaurants serve at the d of a meal.

Puffed-rice flour (or puffed-heat flour) is a good thing in ich to roll those sticky confec-ns of dried fruit, honey, and ts, which are so much better for ildren than candy.

When you are through tinkering th puffed rice, start with the raw e grains themselves. Of course, u can buy rice flour, but it is rd to find. Besides you may want vary the conventional grind.

Basic Rice Mixture

Put ½ cup uncooked rice ough the blender. Add ¼ tea-oon salt, 4 cups milk and 3 table-oons sugar. Remove to double iler and add an inch stick of namon for flavoring. Cook until e is soft. Take out cinnamon k, and put rice through the nder. You now have a creamy ck rice and milk liquid which n be used as the basis for at st four other dishes.

. Chill and eat, just as it is, h jam and cream.

2. For a more elaborate pudding :

gg yolks
cup milk
cup sugar

Cook this in a double boiler till mixture thickens. Blend this h rice mixture and chill.

3. For a still more elaborate xture, wait till the rice custard xture is cool and add a cup of ipped cream. Put it in a mold d chill in the refrigerator. This es you a blender improvement Riz à l'Imperatrice, the fanciest dessert there is. You may make s even more elaborate by adding died fruits.

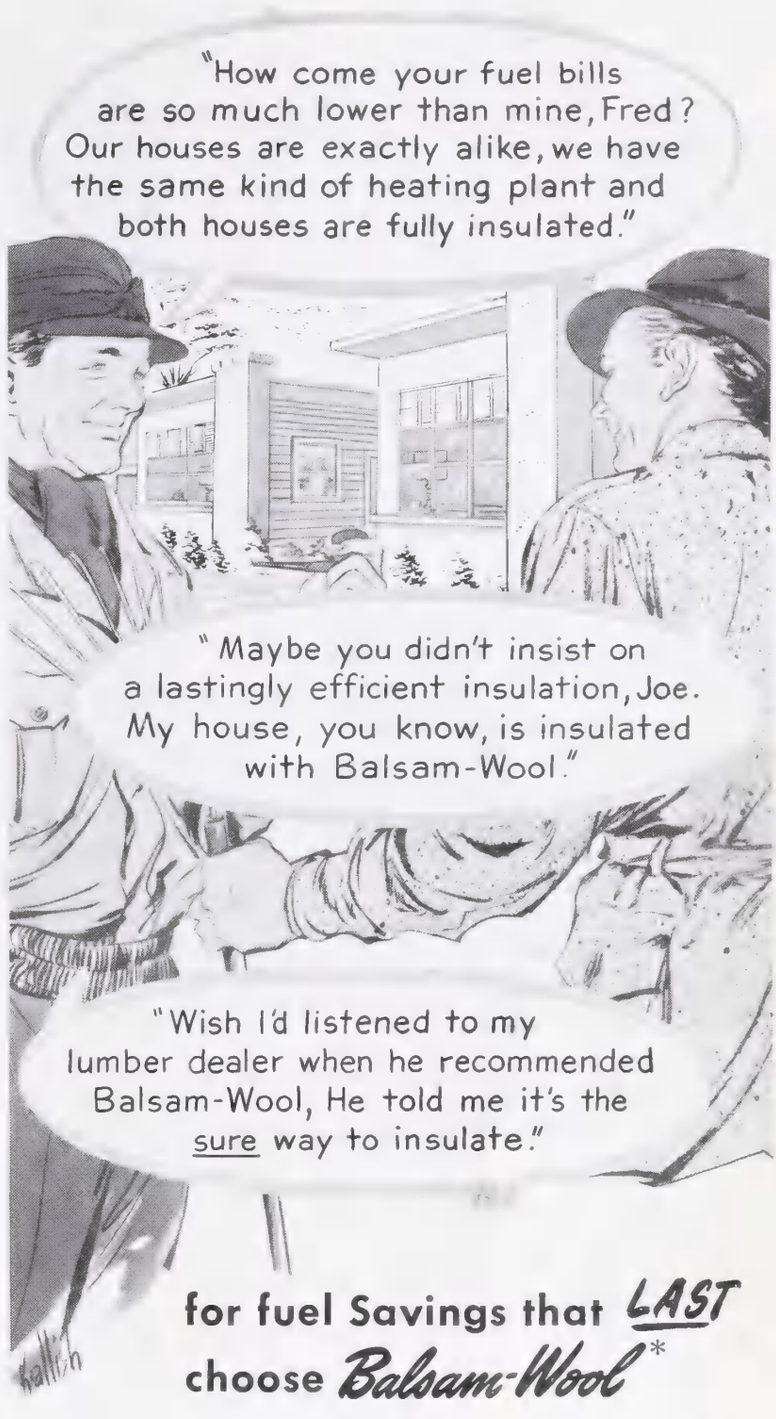
. You may make it less elabor-by substituting one envelope of ox's unflavored gelatine, soft-d in 2 tablespoons of water for custard mixture. Add gelatine he rice mixture when it is hot. en it is sufficiently cool, add whipped cream.

hese puddings are examples of kind of dish in which propor-ns are not too important. If the mixture is thicker or thinner n that given here, or if you ve out the gelatine in the last ipe, the taste will be good just same. The only difference will whether you can mold it.

The specialty of the blender is the purée. For instance, raisins, peanuts, honey, pineapple, pineapple juice, and banana can be put through the blender to make a thick goo about the consistency of a good, rich, thick chocolate malt. Chilled in the refrigerator, this makes a sort of cold plum pudding.

The contents of the mixture can be varied indefinitely. However, there is one thing to look out for in mixtures of this kind. When these mixtures are first blended, the flavor of each ingredient remains separate. After a time, one flavor has a tendency to take over. In this case, it is the peanut flavor which does this. This is the reason why some things, such as vegetable soup, are better the next day and some are not. So try everything, but keep a little notebook so you can remember just how different flavors act.

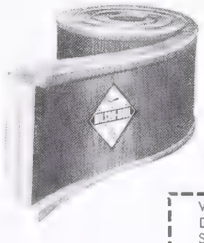
This sort of mixture is the type of thing which is going to find its way into our diet more and more. Blends of fresh fruit, or fruit and milk, make rich creamy concoctions that are delicious in themselves, or may be served over ice cream and cake.



Experiment with cottage cheese in the blender. For a new taste thrill try:

Nasturtium Cheese

½ pound cottage cheese
A handful of nasturtium flowers (no stems)
⅛ teaspoon salt



Put in enough cream so that the cheese won't clog the blender, and turn on the motor. You will be surprised at the result. So will your friends. If you want the mixture a little sweeter, add honey. The color of this mixture is unusual—like the green of avocado dressing. Both make decorative dishes. (This is integral decoration—far better than raw turnip flowers.)

SEE HOW many ways you can use your blender. But remember this. The celebrated cuisines of the world are the result of experiments which have been going on for hundreds of years. When we have had time to polish new recipes, to learn tricks of preparation and combinations of taste, gastronomy and nutrition will reach a new high. The frontier of food preparation lies in the field of new foodstuffs and new tools. Here is the point of growth and adventure in food. We must learn to use our own resources if we are going to develop an American cuisine and enjoy the full benefit of our times.

Naturalized bulbs should be lanted informally in big free-form rifts. Use 50 or more bulbs of a ngle color for the greatest effect the design of your garden. In- ividual bulbs can be 12 inches part in the drift—even 18 inches r daffodils in rich soil. Closer lanting brings on crowding and need to dig and separate the ulbs to get good flowering.

Bulbs in drifts help each other ithstand buffeting spring winds d rains, an important plus value naturalizing, even though the ulbs used for naturalizing make warf plants much shorter than e types usually grown.

Naturalized bulbs also bloom rlier in the season, so they stay bloom longer because the eather is cooler. This earliness mes from two directions. First, e kinds of bulbs you should use r naturalizing happen to be those at bloom first. Second, any bulb ooms earlier if left undisturbed the ground.

Maybe your lawn is tree-shaded. his doesn't prevent you from nat- alizing your spring bulbs. Flower ze won't be quite up to par for sunny place, but your bulbs will well, even when the drifts come ght up to the main trunk of big ees. In fact, spring bulbs are the eal flowers for shady places. hey make most of their growth r the year during the first few eeks of spring. By the time your ade trees are fully leafed out. wer buds for next year's bloom are already present inside your bulbs, and their leafy tops have died down. Your bulbs merely rest out of sight in the ground until the following spring.

The only real deterrent to success with naturalizing is poor drainage in the soil. No bulb thrives in soil that stays too wet. Most kinds die. Daffodils may struggle along for years, but you won't get any blooms until the drainage problem is overcome.

Has tulip "fire" plagued you in the past? Then try Kaufmanniana tulips. They are remarkably resistant to this dread disease. The extra-toughness of their flower petals seems to be too much for the fungus to attack successfully.

ALL the spring bulbs make good cut flowers. Kaufmanniana and Praestans tulips, though, close up at night, and spoil carefully made flower arrangements, unless you wait until the tulips are four or five days old before you cut them. The business of closing each night isn't objectionable in your garden because the outer side of the petals differ in color from the inner side. You get the effect of two flowers for one.

Naturalizing isn't exactly a new practice. Our grandmothers used it. But it has been overlooked by most gardeners for a half century. Give it a try yourself. Naturalize a few drifts of bulbs this fall. You'll find bulb-growing a lot more fun than you thought it could be.

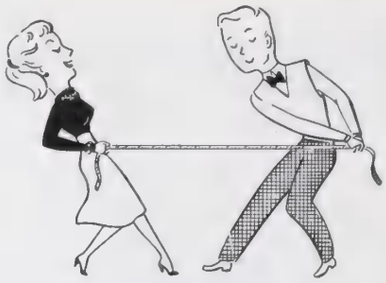
Chrysanthemums are among the easiest of all garden flowers to grow. They have no special requirements about soil, exposure, or plant food. Pests are not particularly troublesome: any all-purpose spray or dust makes short work of them.

About the only problem you are likely to encounter in growing chrysanthemums concerns keeping them alive through an unusually rugged winter. The chief trouble is poor drainage. If the soil stays waterlogged and freezing weather arrives, your plants are likely to die. Even if you can't see puddles of water, the soil may be so wet that when it freezes, your chrysanthemums are pushed up out of the ground by the frost. This naturally breaks the roots so that your plants then can't get the water needed to keep them alive the next time the sun shines.

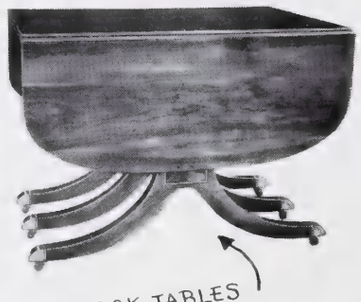


A FEW varieties sold to home gardeners by some nurserymen are not reliably hardy even in well-drained soil. If you are new at growing chrysanthemums, stick to the following 15 top-rated varieties chosen as best in the 1950 poll of the National Chrysanthemum Society.

Mrs. H. E. Kidder—yellow
Charles Nye—yellow
Betty—rose-pink
Lavender Lady—lavender
Carnival—burnt orange
Silver Sheen—white
White Doty—white
Olive Longland—salmon pink
Major Bowes—pink
Avalanche—cream white
Hilda Bergen—reddish bronze
Yellow Spoon—yellow
Chippewa—purple
Red Velvet—crimson
Lilian Doty—pink

All of these can be planted now, either as big plants already in bloom or as vigorous young divisions. Or you can wait until spring. The advantage in buying now is that your plants will grow actively next spring long before the soil will be dry enough for you to set out new plants. The one disadvantage in fall planting is that newly set-out plants are most likely to be affected by a hard winter.

Next year you might also like to try some pots of hardy chrysanthemums especially treated to bloom for Mother's Day. You buy these plants in pots in early May already to bloom. They will have been forced by the florist in a greenhouse under artificial light until March 1, then allowed only the normal sunlight until April 1, and then kept in complete darkness for 14 hours each day until May 1. You could give this special treatment yourself, of course, if you have a home greenhouse. However you can buy the plants all treated, enjoy their spring bloom, then plant them in your garden for fall bloom (yes, two flowering seasons the first year). If you order hardy varieties, your plants should live permanently in your garden. They will bloom only in the autumn however. The spring blooming occurs only once unless you re-treat the plants each spring. Hardy chrysanthemums that have responded well to treatment for spring bloom are: Lavender Lady, Chippewa (purple), White Lady, Early Yellow, and Jewell (pink).



Selling potted chrysanthemums in bloom at Mother's Day is a new venture for most florists, so you may have to cajole your local man to try it. Experience last spring was that home gardeners were highly enthusiastic, although florists were sure in their own minds that few people would buy chrysanthemums in May. But you can see the big advantage—all the color show suggested on page 140 not once, but twice a year.

Water- and heat-resistant, too. Limed-oak, Prima Vera (gray, blond, natural). 32″ x 48″, $2.69. Other veneers, marbles, leathers, available. Halle's, Cleveland.

Here's a tot-size version of the bridge set that unfolds in a flash when wanted; hides away when idle. It's built to take punishment and so devised that it can't collapse while in use. The extra-roomy 23″x30″ table top and 11″x12″ chair seats merit mention, too; they're plywood, set into the Spartan hardwood structure. Varnish finish. $14.95; additional chairs, $3.95. Products of Georgia, Louisville, Georgia.

Drawer dividers are so needed, and work such space-organizing wonders, that we can't fathom why the likes of the Columbia Adjustable Divider wasn't born long ago. The telescoped metal panels pull to size for areas from 9″ to 17″ wide. Their flanged ends tack into place top and bottom. Usable, too, as upright cabinet partitions. Four, 2½″, 4½″ or 7½″ high, $1, $1.19, $1.29. Miles Kimball Co., Oshkosh, Wisconsin.

The rocker of the Berk-Lock Leisure Lounge tilts it to the angle you find most restful; its lever locks it thus. Then settle back and revel in the relaxing comfort of its body-conforming contours and multi-pillowed midriff. Handsomely covered in leather-like Boltaflex (mottled) or Pantasote (crushed grain). Red, green, chartreuse, gray, brown. Mahogany base: bleached or dark, $89.50. Jordan-Marsh, Boston, Mass.

Tape Color, a brush-on dye you use just as it is, makes it this simple to reclaim dingy, discolored, faded tapes and cords. They don't shrink or stiffen, and dry in a few minutes. Also, the waterless, fast-color dye contains a tape-protecting plastic. Brown rust, blue, green, red, mulberry, yellow; intermix them for special hues. Usable as a wood stain also. $1.25 (dyes 300″ of tape). Fitzgeralds, 545 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Decorating advice by mail

If you're decorating or refurnishing your home, House Beautiful offers you this personal service

How many times have you said: "If I could only talk to someone who really knows decorating, I could whip that room into shape."? Well, here is your big opportunity. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is offering you the consulting services of Elaine Neal, an expert who knows the home furnishings field inside out.

This is not a service handled by a department or group of people. It is a truly personal service done by one person for one person. In other words, every room is visualized as a unit and seen through one pair of eyes. If a group of people handled the mail with one person doing color, for instance, and one fabrics, and one furniture placement, there could be no continuity, for each one would see your problem from a special angle—a different viewpoint.

Therefore, we ask you to be patient with us when the answers do not reach you within the three- or four-week limit. Mrs. Neal tries to get them out as promptly as possible, but at certain seasons—spring and fall—the mail piles up so that the time lapse can be quite long. And the only fair thing is to answer the letters in their proper turn.

Try to send in your plans and information well ahead of the date by which you wish to complete your rooms, and follow the directions on the opposite page carefully.

WHAT YOU SHOULD SEND US

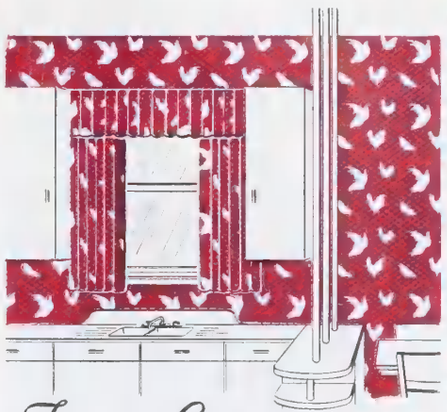
1. Send us a floor plan drawn to ¼-inch scale, showing window and door placements, giving measurements and dimensions, ceiling height, and distances fireplaces or jogs extend from wall. Indicate the location of radiators, pipes, and electric outlets. Tell us the kind of windows you have, whether sash or casement, small or large panes, the distance of sills from the floor. Tell us in what direction the windows face.

2. List your favorite colors, and tell us which styles of decoration and furniture you prefer. Describe the furnishings you wish to keep and what you desire to buy new. Tell us whether your taste leans to wallpaper or paint.

3. Describe your location, whether city, suburban, or country. If there is a particular condition which must affect your choice of furnishings, please mention it. State your problems clearly in separate paragraphs. The more carefully you follow the instructions, the more helpful you will find the decorating advice you receive.

WHAT WE DO FOR YOU

1. We will send your floor plan back to you, showing your furniture arranged in a comfortable, balanced manner.



2. We will suggest color schemes and send color guide samples of wallpaper, paint colors, and fabrics. We cannot, however, guarantee fabric distribution in all regions, but our samples will serve as guides for your shopping.

3. We will suggest draperies, accessories, and the placement of pictures, mirrors, and lamps.

4. We will send you this information—four pages of it—clipped together in an orderly, easy-to-refer-to, portfolio, 8″ x 10″. All samples will be pasted down neatly and securely on the pages so you won't mix them or lose them.

windows facing south. It is a lovely room, especially when the clouds break and the sun starts streaming through those windows. You think: "I want that, too, in our future house." But after a while, you feel rather hot. As you leave, the cold outdoor air feels for a moment like a pleasant relief.

A dull little story. But it is typical of the kind of thing we mean—the kind of thing that is so very much worth studying. It is typical that a house is almost right but not quite. The discomfort is mild. It is typical that you clearly realize your discomfort only when it stops. (That's a sign to look out for. If, on leaving a room, you have a sensation of relief, you haven't been comfortable in that room.) Typical, also, is the reaction of various people as they go home.

MR. and Mrs. A disregard the whole thing. Like most of us, they have been brought up to pay no attention to mild, ordinary discomforts. And, of course, they are right. One doesn't want to be a pampered pet. One wants to be an effective person who can keep operating even if conditions are not 100 per cent right. But—if you happen to be planning a house, then comfort is your business. Even slight discomfort should make you sit up and take notice, as one single missing beat of the engine makes an airplane pilot sit up! What's wrong? Suppose the unobservant A's built themselves a house. Suppose in doing so they made the same mistake the Smiths have made—only a little more so. Instead of a mere flaw, they might get really bad discomfort.

Dr. B says to Mrs. B: "The Smiths rather overheat their house: it's not healthy." He's right. But he stops too soon. Why do the Smiths overheat? They are made like other people. They are dressed like other people. Presumably they like it no hotter than other people. What's wrong with their house?

Says Mrs. C to Mr. C: "Did you notice how hot it got after the sun came out? Maybe those windows aren't such a good idea after all. The sun can certainly make it uncomfortably hot, even in winter." Mr. C says: "Of course it can. Before I met you, when I used to go skiing in Sun Valley . . ."

Now this is coming close to the truth. The C's are doing two important pieces of headwork. They ask, "Why"? And they ask, "So what? What does this experience suggest about our future house?" But they still haven't hit the nail on the head. Think: Wasn't it nice, at least in the beginning, to have the sun come in and brighten up an indoor winter day? Think: Isn't it pleasant, with fuel bills being what they are, to have heat delivered free by the sun?

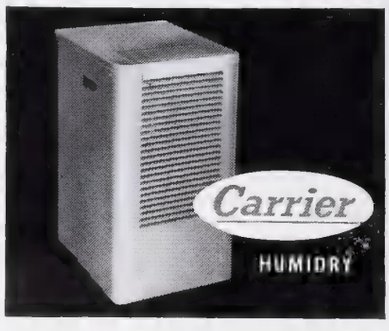
Now you. You have been observing houses for some time, and are more observant than the rest. You say: "Did you notice, after the sun came out, how the Smiths' radiators kept right on heating, as if nothing had happened? Something must be wrong with their thermostat." Your husband says: "I don't think it's the thermostat. I think it is the heating plant itself. The thermostat probably turned the fire off all right, but the radiators took too long to cool off." You say: "Then, if we are going to have a glass wall in our house, it seems we'll have to find some kind of heating system that cools off quickly when the sun comes out." Your husband says: "Yes—and heats up quickly when the sun goes behind a cloud."

There you have done it. You have discovered something important: Big glass needs quick-responding heat. As we put more and more glass into our houses, this rule becomes more and more important; but few people know it. If a glassy house is a disappointment (as some of them are), it is most likely because this rule has been disregarded.

And now, look. To figure this out, you didn't have to be any kind of expert. All you did was observe.



You learn to notice things

If you watch houses for a while, you'll find that you become more observant. You notice discomfort more. This doesn't mean you become a hothouse flower. You can stand as much discomfort as you could before. But you become more impatient with it. Why don't they build them right? And, most important, you become more sophisticated in analyzing just exactly what a house is doing to you.

It goes, perhaps, like this. One day you sit near a fireplace, and you think: "Nice, this glow of heat." You close your eyes and move your head about, and you can feel exactly where the heat comes from, how it strikes now night, but of course it's long gone out, and even the ashes have been cleaned out. But the glow definitely is still there. You touch the brick work. It is just faintly warm. This faint warmth is enough to give off noticeable heat radiation. Now you have discovered that radiant heat comes not only from things which are outright hot, but also from things merely warm!

You can't play around with moisture. Right now it's busy in your basement, costing you hundreds of dollars in damage. Give your tools, photo equipment, furniture, walls and furnace sure dampness protection with a Carrier Humidry—the small, quiet-operating dehumidifier that in 24 hours removes up to 18 pints of water from the air! No messy chemicals to bother about. Just plug it in and forget about it. Hermetically sealed compressor requires no oiling. Handsome gray Hammertone finish. Call your Carrier dealer, or write Carrier Corporation, Syracuse, New York.

Then, one day, you open the door of your refrigerator, and the cold jumps at you in the same characteristic manner — radiant cold. You can feel the coldness of the icy, frosted surfaces hit your cheeks just as you felt the heat of the fire hit them. You suddenly understand. Cold, too, can shine on you. Anything near you which is cold has a cooling effect. It's the same with cold-shine as with heat-shine. A thing does not have to be outright cold to make you feel cool. One cold winter day somebody comes in with his outdoor clothes still on; you feel distinctly a cooling effect. People say, "He has brought the cold in with him." Or, "The cold seems to cling to his clothes." What really happens is this: The cloth is still cold, and therefore shines coldness at you if you get close enough. Anything that is cool to the touch has a cooling effect.

USELESS knowledge? It helps you put your finger on a lot of troubles with houses. Look. In a house, you are completely surrounded by things: the walls, the ceiling, the floor, the windows. These things all have, of course, some temperature. They may be faintly warm, or rather cool, or anywhere in-between. Well, their temperature makes all the difference to your comfort! Suppose the air in the room is 70°—supposed to be about right. But if the walls, etc. are 80°, the room feels very warm. If the walls, etc. are 60°, the room feels very chilly.

All this would read to most people like much intricate science. But to you, after you have once learned to recognize radiant heat when you meet it, it now becomes common sense. You observe the radiant-heating or radiant-cooling effects of a house every day. And so you learn something new about your future house every day.

For example: Your rented house has a bedroom that is very hot at bedtime. Other people might say: "Our house will have a bedroom that a breeze blows through all night." Then, when they had spent a lot of money on building such a bedroom, they would find 1) that a breeze often doesn't blow at night; 2) that if it blows, it is irritating. But you have learned to observe things. You say: "The ceiling is too warm. It is shining heat down at my bed. I can feel it shine! The ceiling has got warm because the attic is poorly ventilated and very hot, and all the material which forms the attic floor and bedroom ceiling has been soaking up heat all day." So you say: "Our house will have its bedrooms on the ground floor"; or "In our house, to keep the upstairs bedrooms cool, we shall take very great care to build the attic so that it keeps cool, and the ceiling stays cool." And there you have a valuable idea for your future house.

One winter evening, you visit again those friends of yours with the big windows. As you step into the room it seems most comfortable. You sit for two hours, you forget all about comfort or discomfort. Then suddenly you realize you are really chilled to the bone. You look at the thermometer. It reads 75°. It ought to be warm enough, but it isn't. Well, you know what the trouble is. The cold window panes are radiating cold at you (or you are radiating heat at them—it's the same thing.) And because you understand the trouble, you also know, by plain common sense, how to fix it. Use double glass or storm sash, so that the inside window pane will not be so cold. And draw a heavy curtain across the window at night, to act as a "radiation shield" that keeps the heat from jumping quite so directly from your skin to the window pane.

And so it goes. So you learn about houses simply by watching them work. The point of this long discussion is not "The Importance of Radiant Heat." or "The Importance of a Quick-Acting Heating System If You Have Big Windows." Those are only examples. You will discover dozens of things that are equally important. The point of this discussion is: It will pay you to watch closely what a house does to you personally, to your own comfort. You can make lots of valuable discoveries, and quite without scientific fuss, without Big Words. The final purpose of a house is your comfort. And the most scientific and accurate research tools, therefore, are your goose-pimples, your cold feet!

Once you know exactly what your trouble is, it is almost always very easy to fix—perhaps not in your present house, but certainly in the house you are going to build. Climate Control works mostly with devices that are quite common sense. You understand them all. Walls too hot? Put 'em in the shade. Figure out where the sun is at various times of the day and year, and place your shade-roofs, shade-walls, shade trees accordingly. Or paint the walls white, and use a white roof. Everybody knows that white clothes are cooler in summer sun than dark clothes. The same goes for white roofs and white walls. Walls too cool? Well, use insulation. It is no different from putting on a sweater—only you put a sweater on the house, instead of yourself. House still full of hot air on summer evenings when the outdoors has already nicely cooled off? Everybody knows hot air wants to rise, cool air wants to sink. All right, make some holes high up to let the hot air out on top. Fixing the trouble—that's easy. But first you have to know just what your trouble is.

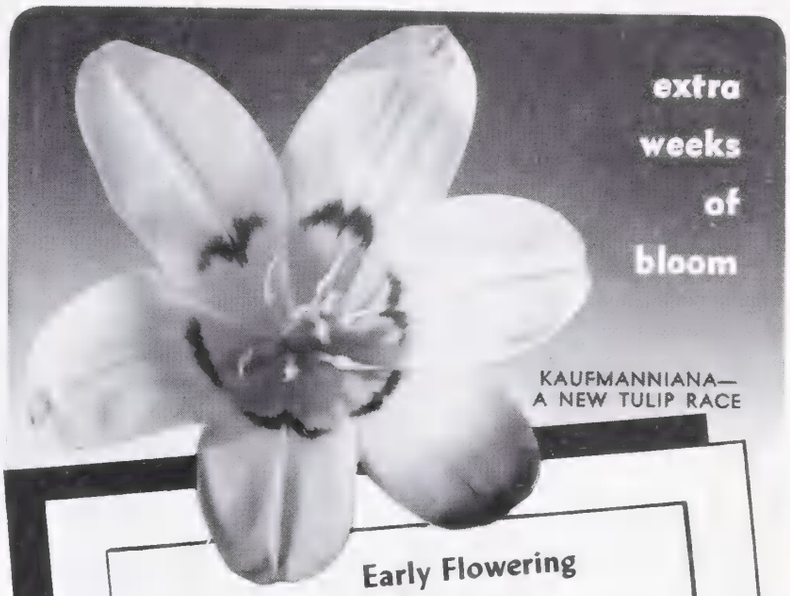
oo many vegetables are usually the garden now and it is difficult know what to do with them. You n't eat or can them all. I like to t my friends know that I have rden spoils and am willing to vide them. It makes for pleasant mpany. A friend of mine who rms near Sherman, Connecticut, arly puts in an acre garden for mself and his family; then he lds a two-acre plot to which he vites the several dozen neighbors help themselves when and as ey wish. They're mostly summer ople, so they do little if any rdening, but when he's in trou-e—and not infrequently—they're ways on hand to help him out hen he needs it.



reeze food without blanching it. sts by one of the great gas and wer companies in California ow that blanching (dropping getables and berries into boiling ater for a few moments) is un-cessary. Blanching (sudden high at) stops the chemical enzymes vegetables, which is fine for nning, but sub-zero freezing does e same thing. So, why double on work? Try freezing fruits, d vegetables without washing, iling, capping, pitting, and with-t processing them with sugar syrup.

se up extra vegetables in a most pealing way, especially to chil-en, by whipping up for lunch or nner what the Bretons call rata-uille, a recipe passed along by elen Matousek, a garden-minded member of the United Nations. It's a delightful combination of three or more vegetables. Brown a sliced onion in olive oil, add cubed zuccinni and cook for five minutes more. On top of this place cubed tomatoes, and simmer. The trick is to use a low flame and to add, after the tomatoes, a pinch of sugar, enough lemon juice to flavor, and salt and pepper to taste. Celery seed is optional, but many people like it. The dish improves if seasoned with Persillade, a paste made by grinding chopped parsley, garlic, and salt.

Harvesting tips and other such garden lore: A great deal of your fall and winter eating pleasure will depend on how and when you harvest your crops. So will the length of time that you can keep your fruits and vegetables in storage. I personally prefer the rule of starting as late as possible; and being as late as possible is contingent on the first frost of fall. Here in Connecticut that may be any time toward the end of this month to the middle of October. A check with the weather bureau is a great help toward determining what the most likely date will be.

Continue cropping the garden to within a week or two of the expected frost. Only parsnips and Brussels sprouts can be nipped by frost; in fact, it improves their flavor. Usually parsnips are left in the ground—even after it begins to snow—and harvested as needed.

THIS IS ABOUT WHITE FLOWER FARM OF LITCHFIELD

White Flower Farm got its name because its partners like white flowers. It is as simple as that. They have the white varieties of scores of species—so now you know where to get white flowers. The partners do not stick their noses up at colored flowers, literally hundreds of the finest varieties are represented in their collection. The list is a broad one of bulbs, perennials, roses and shrubs.

Now White Flower Farm is set up, not to handle a big nursery business, but to cater to those demanding gardeners who believe the outside of a home is just as important as the inside. Most of its customers spend $50 or more a year on their gardens. Many others, less well-fixed materially (but just as demanding), are also its customers. The point is these gardeners, want prime plants first—price second. Because these able gardeners know how to handle plants, the Farm's liberal guarantee is seldom used.

White Flower Farm's partners, due to deteriorating Parcel Post and Express service since the war, must refuse orders for bare-root plants when distance or time militates against safe arrival. They sell no non-hardy material without warning. Their catalogue contains no colored pictures or photographs but descriptions are accurate and adequate for the initiated.

If you are interested in seeing this catalogue and in knowing more about this exclusive small nursery please write us on your business or residence stationery.

HARVEST TIPS FOR YOUR VEGETABLE GARDE

Brussels sprouts are taken out of the ground, stem and all, after the frost burns the leaves, and are stored (of all places) in the garage. They don't seem to mind the topsy-turvy temperatures of fall, and winter-cold keeps the heads crisp.

Canning, brining, and freezing continues at a hectic pace to insure a plentiful supply of vegetables and fruit for winter and spring. Vegetables are selected while still young and before they become stringy. Fruits are picked full-ripe; berries also. Late peas, for example, are picked at their peak of growth in the late afternoon (at that time they will have a greater sugar content) and are canned or frozen in the cool of evening. This gives you better control over possible spoilage and results in less loss of flavor and texture. Some young snap beans are packed in brine for dietary variety. Cabbages are sliced for preparing sauerkraut; green tomatoes and cucumbers are made into pickles by the cold-pack method which is so simple to follow.

Apples, cabbages, celery, and winter squash, when harvested at the correct stage, are more easily stored than preserved. So are numerous other vegetables. In fact, home storage is the cheapest and easiest way to keep many vegetables and some fruits for winter use. Also, they maintain a better flavor when they are stored than by canning or freezing.

Success in storing vegetables and fruits depends upon: 1) the produce which must be free from decay, disease, insects, and injury (bruises caused by handling or l frosts; 2) the selection (earlie of varieties and strains that a suitable for storage; 3) and ha vesting them at the correct stage maturity. Difficulties of storage o cur most often because the veg tables and fruits are picked t soon before frost (those that rea near-maturity at the time of co fall weather will store best), picked too ripe. Vegetables mu be pulled, washed, and stored b fore they reach maturity. Fruits- apples, for example—are nev harvested full-ripe. They may ha a rosy flush but never a deep r color. Tomatoes may be pull from the ground while the fru are still green and hung in a co moist, dark place. As you ne tomatoes, snip off the fruits a place them in a warm, sun window to ripen. Last year we h tomatoes for salads up to t middle of December.

Vegetables you can store. Brusse sprouts, broccoli, dry beans a peas (too costly for home garden unless you have a huge plot a plenty of time), late cabbage, ca liflower, late celery, endive, onio (dry), parsnips, all of the r crops (beets, carrots, etc.), po toes, pumpkins, squash, sweet tatoes. Fruits include apples, pea grapes, and plums.

The rules of storage. Maintain correct temperature. The neare is to 32° Fahrenheit, the lon most fruits and vegetables—ot than potatoes—will keep. Bel that temperature, beware; vege bles will freeze and, on thawing later, rot and decay set in rapid

LEADING ROSE DEALERS SELL P

Maintain the proper moisture content (humidity) in your storage cellar. Most vegetables and fruits are 85%, or more, water. Unless the moisture content of the air is high they will wilt and shrivel.

Cool and very moist storage is required by root crops and apples. Keep the humidity high, spraying the basement floor if necessary. Pile these crops loosely in bins or boxes raised a few inches above the damp floor.

Cool and moist is the rule for cabbage, Chinese cabbage, potatoes, and celery. Keep these vegetables in slatted crates or on open shelves where the air circulation is slow but good.

Dry and cool is the requirement for onions, dried beans, squash and pumpkins. No humidity and a cool temperature—45° F. to 60° F. —is important. I've had best success by storing these vegetables in the furnace room, as far away from the furnace as possible. Pumpkins have lasted until spring. And the other vegetables, in all classes, last long into the winter if you pick the ones that seem to be headed for earliest destruction. In storage, the healthiest vegetables are always the last to be brought to the kitchen.

Harvest potatoes, if you can, after the vines die naturally. In short-season areas, frost will nip the foliage and the skins of the potatoes will peel. That doesn't damage them at all. Fork them up as soon as possible, let the skins "set" in the air for a few hours, and then store them for the coming winter. Some gardeners wash them before storing, but I only brush them casually with a stiff floor brush. It works; they can be washed later just prior to cooking.

Sweet potatoes are treated in this manner also. The frost, in all sections of the country, should kill the vines before the sweet potatoes are harvested. Moreover, the tubers must be cured in the sun (where you dug them up) for a week to ten days before they become reasonably edible. If it should start to rain, rush the tubers to your garage or protect them with a tarpaulin.

Green onions cannot be stored. Use them up as they come from the garden. Contrariwise, dry onions can be stored for a long time if they are properly ripened and cured. You can spot a ripe onion by the foliage. The neck withers first and the leaves, still green, fall over. Often you can hasten ripening by crushing the onion leaves to the ground. Pull up ripe onions, leave them on top of the ground until the leaves dry out, cut an inch from the bulbs and stack loosely in crates. If they were rained on during the curing process, be sure to dry them out before you place them in storage.

the dirt, clip off the useless foliage, and store them as quickly as possible in your cellar. Even the soft, or tender vegetables, can be stored for a few weeks to several months. I've kept eggplant up to December by keeping them in a moist room—never touching each other. Green peppers also have kept well for six weeks after the last frost.

Pot up a few herbs now for the winter seasoning. There's nothing that will add a fillip to cookery like fresh herbs. Don't be stingy about the size of the pot you select. Small pots are hard to care for, dry out fast, and don't offer enough "seasoning" to last for more than a month or two. Five-inch pots are a pleasant balance of all of the elements of window herb gardening.

Compost your garden refuse now, as you clear the vegetable plot. You'll need as much as you can manufacture for spring spading. I do not hold with organic gardening as a system which prohibits the use of chemical fertilizers. But what organic materials, properly decomposed, can do for the texture of your soil approaches the miraculous. After all, good soil is the first fundamental for insuring better-than-good plant growth.

Chop up your garden left-overs if they are too bulky to compost. I like to pull and cut the corn stalks as quickly as the ears are harvested. No sense in leaving them to further mature and extract valuable plant food from the ground. Beet and turnip tops are reserved for the kitchen; but carrot tops, the outer leaves of lettuce and cabbage, and the remaining stalks and leaves of broccoli and cauliflower are tossed on the compost pile. Beans and peas and cucumber vines are, too, if not diseased; otherwise, burn them.

Composting is an art and like most arts is easily understood—if you follow the rules. Unlike most arts it is simple. For some reason our grandparents liked to push vegetable wastes into pits. Possibly to get them out of sight. Many gardeners continue this method, although it has been soundly established by the United States Department of Agriculture that pits are muddy and soggy and unmanageable. Furthermore, they waste more than they save. Compost, if you must, on top of the ground in some hidden corner of the garden. Or use, as my neighbor does so successfully, a 5- x 5-foot box that is 4 feet high with a break-a-way side. He built it of 2 by 4's and 1 by 12's with a one-inch gap between the wide boards for drainage; nothing on the bottom or top. And I agree with him that a handful (small) of ammonium sulfate scattered over each successive layer does wonders in hastening decomposition and adding some plant food.

Pruning begins now in all seriousness—although sap may still be running. There are several schools of thought about pruning: the summer pruners and those who prefer spring or fall. Mostly, it's a case of common sense and suited to plant preferences and habits. I tend to think of spring as the time to prune for shaping trees and cutting wisely to insure fruiting spurs. Winter for sharp cutting-back to assure vigorous summer growth for development and training. Fall pruning, especially, is done easily and slowly—and before growth stops. Running sap helps form a winter-hard callous and prohibits the entrance of bacteria and fungi into the cuts. So, prune young fruit trees, particularly the ornamental forms which you may be encouraging. Cut out the old canes o cane-berries (and burn them)

Sow winter rye as open spot pear in your vegetable row. in the seeds and let them fen themselves. It's nice to see a g carpet gradually spread over garden. Barren soil, I have al thought, was unattractive to at. Anyway, winter rye, plowe spaded under in early sprin nearly as good as compost and plements it so well that you need as many organic material Southern California, as wel Florida, I substituted Veitch, pedezia, and other clovers, wi believe, more success. They do nitrogen to the soil while they growing and an extra fillip after they are dug in.

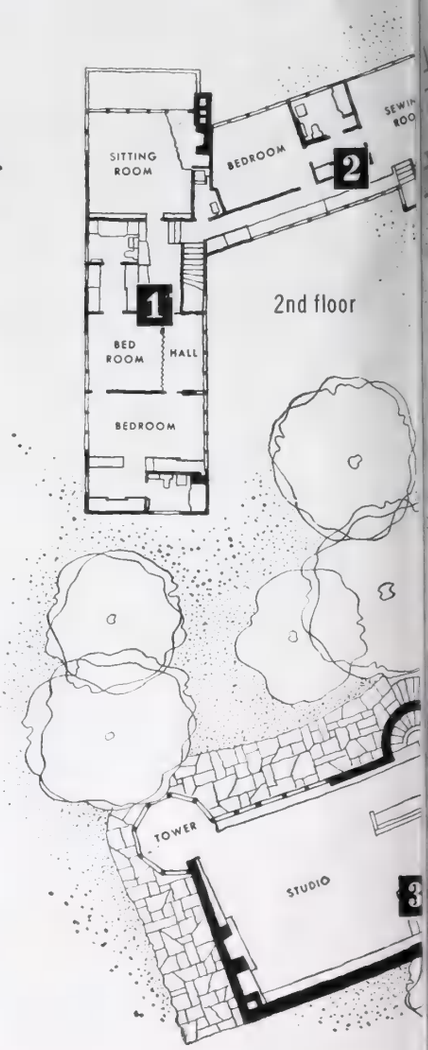
Heat from the big fireplace and from party-size groups could make it uncomfortably warm here in the living room — in heating zone 5. But Honeywell Zone Control easily compensates for these special effects — without making other parts of the house uncomfortable.

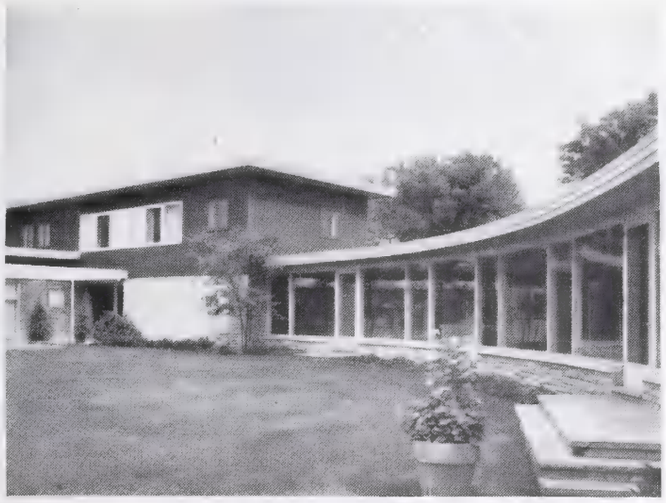
THE NEW TREND IN TEMPERATURE CONTROL CREATES

A Wonderful New Design For Comfort



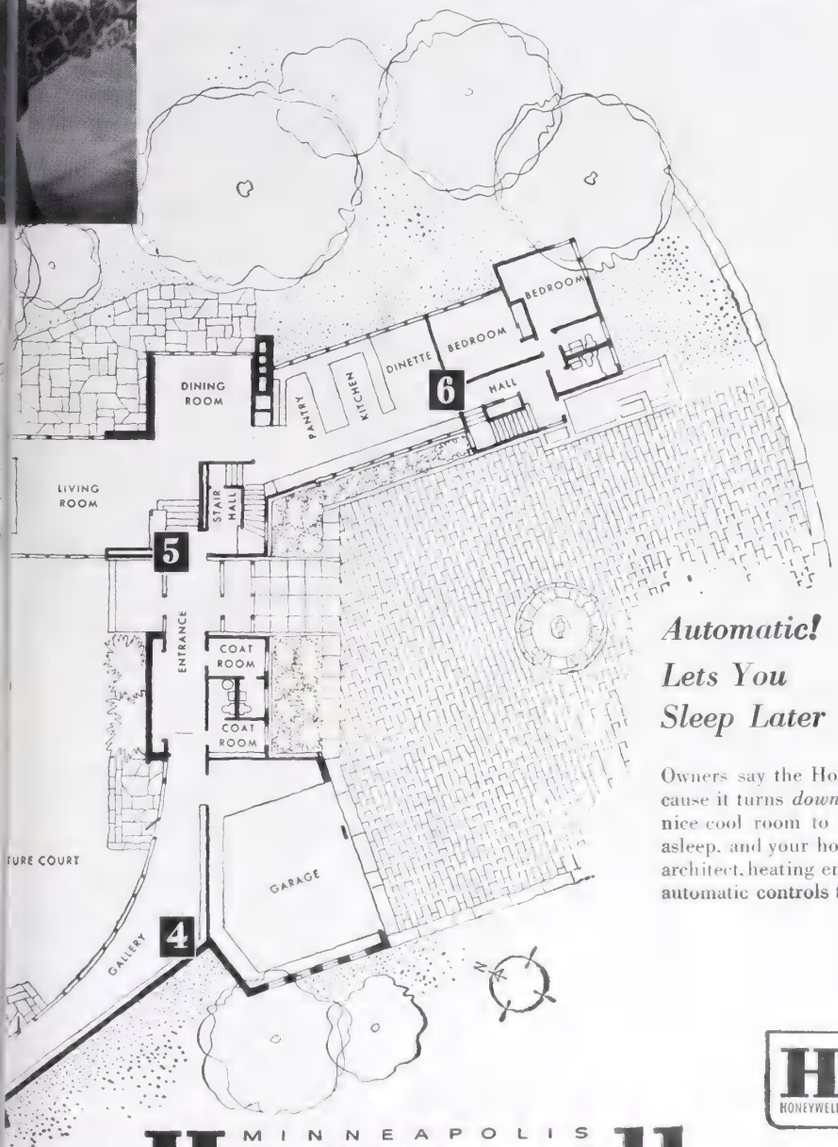
You'll never know truly luxurious comfort — until you live in a house that's divided into separate heating zones.

The strikingly handsome home of Mr. and Mrs. John Rood, overlooking a superb, wide valley in residential Minneapolis, is an excellent example of how modern art forms can furnish the theme for a modern house. And it's an excellent example, too, of how the new trend in temperature control can give you comfortable, even warmth in every room — all winter long — in any kind of weather.



When they developed the floor plan, Minneapolis architects Rhodes Robertson, and Elizabeth and Winston Close realized no ordinary temperature control system would do. "We saw," say the architects, "that each of six areas in the house had a different heating problem. The only way to insure real comfort was to give each area its own independent thermostat system." This was done, and today the Rood home is comfortable throughout — no matter how rigorous the weather.

So why don't you ask your architect and heating engineer about Honeywell Zone Control? Find out how many heating zones your house should have. Learn how easily you can enjoy the luxurious, even warmth made possible by this new design for comfort.



The large glass areas shown here provide desirable north light for paintings and sculpture. But they also make heating needs greater here than on the south side of the house where rooms get the the benefit of winter sun. Yet, Honeywell Zone Control, with separate thermostats compensating for exposure differences, keeps the whole house uniformly comfortable, even on very windy days. In this view, the living room—in heating zone 5—is on the far left. The gallery—in zone 4—is on the right. Also visible is zone 1, in the second floor bedroom area.

The gallery, where some of artist Rood's finest works are on display, is located in heating zone 4. Here, Honeywell Zone Control compensates for heat lost through the large glass area without overheating any of the other rooms in the house. Mr. Rood does much of his sculpturing and painting in the studio—in heating zone 3—which you enter at the far end of the gallery. There, too, special exposure and use demands are easily met by a separate heating system and thermostat.

This is Mrs. Rood's second floor bedroom—in heating zone 1. It would be impossible for any of the downstairs thermostats to meet the special heating needs up here. So the second floor is divided into two zones according to exposure differences. When the upstairs rooms are not in use, temperatures can be lowered to save fuel—while other rooms remain comfortably warm.

Automatic! Lets You Sleep Later

Owners say the Honeywell electric or electronic clock thermostat is wonderful because it turns down the heat—automatically—when you go to bed, and gives you a nice cool room to sleep in; turns up the heat—automatically—while you're still asleep, and your home is warm when you get up. Saves you fuel, besides! Ask your architect, heating engineer or dealer about the new Honeywell thermostats and other automatic controls that can make your heating system a better heating system.

For a winning combination of Durability, Firesafety and Economy

choose a Concrete House

The charming ranch house above is in Seattle's Parkwood Development, which won first prize in a neighborhood development contest sponsored by the National Association of Home Builders. The exterior walls are of concrete masonry with the horizontal joints deeply tooled to create interesting shadow lines. The house also has a sturdy concrete floor.

When you plan your own new home, you'll find that concrete foundations, floors and walls will also result in a winning combination for you. Such a house, properly insulated to make it warm in winter and cool in summer, will assure you a lifetime of comfort and better living because of these features:

DURABILITY. A concrete house lasts longer and stays new longer because of its outstanding resistance to termites, vermin, decay, storms, quakes and the wearing and weathering action of sun, wind, rain, snow and ice.

FIRESAFETY. Concrete can't burn! Don't gamble your family's lives and property against fire when you can build with firesafe concrete. Think of the extra peace of mind you'll enjoy knowing that your home and its contents have this "built-in" protection.

ECONOMY. Because concrete is so weathertight, firesafe and durable, a concrete house needs fewer repairs and less maintenance. Add this to its moderate first cost and divide by the long years of service you can expect and you'll see that the answer is real low-annual-cost shelter. Yes, it actually costs you less per year to live in a concrete house.

HOW TO GET A CONCRETE HOUSE

. . . and what will it cost?

Visit or call your local concrete masonry manufacturer for names of architects and builders experienced in concrete house design and construction. Have the architect of your choice show you how to build your house economically with concrete walls, concrete subfloors and a firesafe roof. For more information write us for "Why People Like Concrete Homes." Free but distributed only in the United States and Canada.

Black rayon velvet on taffeta! A bathroom-décor innovation as glamorous as a "formal," dramatically conceived by Ames's Vel-Dot curtains. It has occurred to a number

dainty selections. Perhaps rt, Haydn, and Mendelssohn are the best composers for children to become acquainted with at an early stage. On the other hand, it seems reasonable to suppose that a child, once he has grown out of the first Mother Goose and nursery rhyme stage, would prefer dramatic, vigorous, exciting music, music where "something is going on." I would guess that a child aged six years or over would prefer Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade to a Haydn symphony, and Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody to Mozart's German Dances.

CHILDREN are modern creatures. They are, by nature's law, more modern in their outlook than their parents. Their tastes are less conservative. In music they are exposed to jazz which, whatever be its intrinsic value as music, is music which speaks a modern language. Even if that language be slang, it uses daring expressions. Children's ears have become accustomed to dissonant harmonies and strange, off-the-beat rhythms. Young ears absorb a new language more easily than older ears do. Your child has fewer prejudices than you have, because you have had more time to accumulate them. It is to be expected that children are in tune with composers who strike some parents as being out of tune. I know one or two children whose favorite music is Shostakovich's Polka from The Age of Gold and Copland's El Salon Mexico; and I know one child whose favorite piece of music is Stravinsky's dissonant The Rite of Spring. Possibly it got to be his favorite because he heard The Rite played and saw it enacted by prehistoric animals in Disney's Fantasia.

In choosing music for a child, then, I would seek it among dramatic music and I would not be afraid to set modern music before him. I suggest, for example, Bizet's Carmen, Verdi's Aïda (certain portions of it), Ravel's Bolero, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony (the first

← Swedish Made* "ANGEL CHIMES"

From Sweden comes this enchanting decorative innovation. Heat rising from the burning candles causes the Herald Angels to revolve lightly striking the bells with their wands. The resulting chime-like sound is as charming as church bells afar. (This is the original, one and only "Angel Chimes." It differs from other Candelabra of its type in that (1) it is made of heavy gauge, highly polished brass instead of copper. (2) It has a tray base to catch possible drippings. (3) It has holders for four candles instead of the usual three. (4) It is imported from Sweden where it is precision made. Don't confuse the "Angel Chimes" with the trayless, 3-candle Candelabra selling at about the same price. Buy the "Angel Chimes"—(The Original and Best!) 13" high—complete with 4 red or white candles.

$2.95 ppd. (Extra candles—imported, hand-dipped, dripless. 75c per doz.

Cadillac

One of a woman's most notable characteristics is her ability to know what she wants. And if it takes a little patience to get it—well, that, too, is among her innate feminine qualities. And that is why so many women are willing to wait for their Cadillacs—even when they are promised earlier delivery elsewhere. For they know that in all it offers them as a passenger, as a driver, and as an owner—there is no substitute. If your family is presently awaiting delivery of this wonderful car—turn a deaf ear to those who would have you compromise your preference. For you are waiting for the richest reward in all the motoring world!

They wouldn't believe me...

When I told them how easy it is to have a Colorful Curtis Kitchen

No "hospital white" in Curtis cabinets! They are easily painted to match or contrast with floor and wall coverings.

What housewife doesn't like to change color schemes occasionally? With Curtis wood kitchen cabinets, it's easy!

"Like many home-owners, John and I wanted plenty of colorful, roomy cabinets in our kitchen—but we were afraid we couldn't afford the price. Then we decided to stop guessing and see our Curtis Woodwork dealer. He showed us how we could have Curtis cabinets—with all their modern convenience—at a price that fitted our budget. Now, our friends won't believe us when we tell them how easy it was to get our beautiful Curtis kitchen!"

You will want Curtis cabinets because:

1. They are made of wood for lifetime sturdiness and they come prime coated. You can leave them white or finish them to suit yourself . . . change color schemes at will.
2. Curtis cabinets, built like fine furniture, bring you all the latest conveniences —plenty of storage space—features such as a snack bar, pan file, bread drawer, mixer unit, and dozens of others.
3. Curtis cabinets are made in sizes and types to fit any shape or size of kitchen. All units go together quickly for easy installation. Hardware is furnished and applied.

See your Curtis Woodwork dealer—ask him to show you the Curtis Kitchen Planning Kit that helps you choose exactly the cabinets you want—and mail this coupon for the Curtis kitchen idea book.

Yes indeed, Adelaide! National's beautiful Salem braids are 100% linen and are two carpets in one! They're reversible...as colorful and luxurious on one side as they are on the other. Magically durable, too! Salem braids are made of pure long-fiber linen specially grown for textile purposes. And to save Mommy work, her new Salem oval is easy to keep clean, and is moth-proof and fire-resistant. In fact, there's no other carpet at any price like a Salem braided linen. Yet Salem braids cost considerably less than other kinds of braided carpets! Available in leading department stores in solid or multi-colors, rounds or ovals, from 3' to 18' diameters. Braided and woven linen broadlooms also available.

Dear Mary,

Just a note to tell you about the marvelous new product I discovered for keeping toilet bowls clean and fresh—without my having to do any more scouring or scrubbing. It's called SERF-o-LET and it fits inside any type of tank. No plumbing is required. It works with each flushing. You'd be surprised at how the bowl sparkles, it really keeps it free of discoloration and harmful bacteria. And the bathroom smells so nice and fresh. No odor of disinfectant at all. It lasts a long time, needs refilling only twice a year. It works on septic tank systems too. The beauty of SERF-o-LET is that it costs so little . . . only $3.95 postpaid, complete. Refills are only $.75 each. It's really worth it for all the time it saves and the job it does. It carries a money back guarantee. Why don't you send a check or money order to KINNARD, INC., 10 Quarry Road, Little Falls, N.J.

CHARCOAL MEATS

Several years ago a fellow we know got to wondering if it were possible to season a piece of meat to give it exactly that same delicious smoke flavor it gets when cooked over a charcoal fire. He started to experiment. Today he has it! CHARCOSALT is as simple to cook with as salt and pepper and you can prepare, right in your own kitchen, the most aromatic charcoal steaks and meats without investing one dime in fancy stoves and broilers. Treat your meat with CHARCOSALT in ten seconds time, and cook in any frying pan or oven broiler. It's amazing but it's true.

GENUINE LEATHER

The distinction and durability that leather confers in the upholstery of automobiles and furniture stem from its fashion-right colors, interesting grains, versatility and adaptability, and from the fact that simple care and normal use actually enhance the life and beauty of leather. Since leather—and leather alone—is genuine, it affords you pride and satisfaction in its possession that you measure in terms of lasting value rather than fleeting price.

A "Cedar Closet" for only $6.95

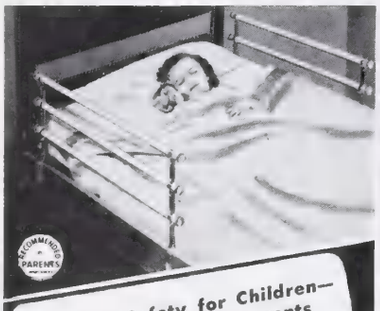
With The New CEDACOTE

- HAS DELIGHTFUL ODOR OF CEDAR
- PROTECTS WOOLENS AGAINST MOTHS

Just Mix With Water And Brush It On



Seems almost too good to be true, doesn't it? But it's a fact. You can now have a cedar-lined closet for just a tiny fraction of the cost of cedar paneling. Cedacote is actually better than cedar lumber, because it is an amazing new compound of ground cedar wood fortified with twice as much moth-repellent cedar oil as the wood itself. Just mix it with water and brush it on like paint. It dries in about an hour. The result is a beautiful cedar-tone finish that never needs painting and bonds permanently to any surface—plaster, wood, wall paper, or metal lath. Cedacote completely moth-proofs a closet, as proved by rigid tests in independent research laboratories. A 5-pound carton of Cedacote will line the average closet — gives coverage of 40 square feet or more. Also ideal for lining drawers, chests, trunks and dog houses.

Waldorf-Astoria Hotel writes: "We have used Cedacote in our closets for three years and have found it very satisfactory."
